Shun O Youth! The Sparkling Wine.

Shun O youth! the sparkling wine;
Yield not to its ruby glow:
Never make its thraldom thine,
Chains and dragons lurk below!

Look not on the luring light
Bright'ning smiling to mislead,
Deceitfully it wins the sight,
And mocketh in thy greatest need.

Whence arise you prison walls
See its victims closed within,:—
'Tis midnight, hark! what cry appalls!
'Tis the demon's work of sin.

Lone, in poverty, behold
A mother weepeth o'er her child;
She clasps its form in eager fold
As break her tones in anguish wild,—

"O God"—she cries—"in mercy hear!"
"My tortured heart can bear no more!"
The agony intense and drear,
It rises from her lowly floor.

And why her plaint of wild despair?
In vain her sorrow words would tell;
Go ask the sparkling cup her care—
How husbands—sire—before it fell!

How have the mighty fallen low;
How bow the strong and yield their breath!
Alas! what evil seeds of woe
Commingle in that cup of death!

Beware, thou generous youth, Beware!
As though high Heaven's thunder spoke;
Trust not unto its fearful snare—
O yield not to its fatal yoke!

WHAT SHE THINKS OF IT.

"A letter! How nice!" said Miss Letitia, looking towards the shelf. "John is as faithful in writing as if he were your lover."

"He is the best lover a woman can have," said Grace, as she busily sorted and arranged the flowers. "For my part, I ask nothing better than John,"

"Let me arrange for you, while you read your letter," said Letitia, taking the flowers from her friend's hands.

Miss Grace took down the letser from the mantel-piece, opened and began to read it. Miss Letitia, meanwhile, watched her face, as we often carelessly watch the face of a person reading a letter.

Miss Grace was not technically handsome, but she had an interesting, kindly, sincere face; and her friend saw gradually a dark cloud rising over it, as one watches a shadow on a field.

When she had finished the letter, with a sudden movement she laid her hand forward on the table among the flowers, and covered her face with her hands. She seemed not to remember that any one was present.

Letita came up to her, and, laying her hand gently on her's, said, "What is it, dear?"

Miss Grace lifted her head, and said in a husky voice,—

"Nothing, only it is so sudden! John is engaged!"

"Engaged! to whom?"

"To Lillie Ellis."

"John engaged to Lillie Ellis?" said Miss Ferguson, in a tone of choked astonishment.

"So he writes me. He is complet ly infatuated by her."

"How very sudden!" said Miss Letita. "Who could have expected it! Lillie Ellis is so entirely out of the line of any of the women he has ever known."

"That's precisely what's the matter," said Miss Grace. "John knows nothing of any but good, noble women; and he thinks he sees all this in Lillie Ellis."

"There's nothing to her but her wonderful complexion," said Miss Ferguson, "and her pretty little coaxing ways; but she is the most utterly selfish, heartless that ever breathed."

"Well, she is to be John's wife," said Miss Grace, sweeping the remainder of the flowers into her apron; "and so ends my life with John. I might have known it would come to this. I must make arrangements at once for another house and home. This house, so much, so dear to me, will be nothing to her; and yet she must be its mistress," she added, looking round on everything in the room, and then bursting into tears.

Now, Miss Grace was not one of the crying sort, and so this emotion went to her friend's heart. Miss Letita went up and put her arms round her.

"Come, Grace," she said, "you must not take it so seriously. John is a noble, manly fellow. He loves you, and he will always be master of his own house."

"No, he won't,—no married man ever is," said Miss Grace, wiping her eyes, and sitting up very straight. "No man that is a gentleman, is ever master in his own house. He has only such rights there as his wife chooses to give him; and this woman won't like me, I'm sure."

"Perhaps she will," said Lettia, in a faltering voice.

"No, she won't; because I have no faculty for lying, or playing the hypocrite in any way, and I shan't approve of her. These soft, slippery, pretty little fibbing women have always been my abomination."

"Oh, my dear Grace!" said Miss Ferguson, "do let us make the best of it."

"I did think," said Miss Grace, wiping her eyes, "that John had some sense. I wasn't such a fool, nor so selfish, as to want him always to live for me. I wanted him to marry; and if he had got engaged to your Rose, for instance..... O Letitia! I always did so hope that he and Rose would like each other."

"We can't choose for our brothers," said Miss Letita, "and, hard as it is, we must make up our minds to love those those they bring to us. Who knows what good influence may do for poor Lillie Ellis! She never has had any yet. Her family are extremely common sort of people, without any culture or breeding, and her wonderful beauty brought them into notice; and they have always used that as a sort of stock in trade."

"And John says, in this letter, that she reminds him of our mother," said Miss Grace; "and he thinks that naturally she was very much such a character. Just think of that, now!"

"He must be far gone," said Miss Ferguson; "but you see, she is distractingly pretty. She has just the most exquisitely pearly, pure, delicate, salt-like look, at times, that you ever saw; and then, she knows exactly how she does look, and just how to use her looks; and John can't be blamed for believing in her. I, who know all about her, am sometimes taken in by her."

"Well," said Miss Grace, "Mrs Lennox was at Newport last summer at the time that she was there, and she told me all about her. I think her an artful, unscrupulous, unprincipled woman, and her being made mistress of this house, just breaks up our pleasant sociable life here. She has no literary tastes; she does not care for reading and study; she won't like our set here, and she will gradually drive them from the house. She won't like me, and she will want to alienate John from me,—so there is just the situation."

"You may read that letter," addded Grace, wiping her eyes, and tossing her brother's letter into Miss Letitia's lap. Miss Letitia took the letter and read it. "Good fellow!" she exclaimed warmly, "you see just what I say,—his heart is all with you."

"Oh, John's heart is all right enough!" said Miss Grace; "and I don't doubt his love. He's the best, noblest, most affectionate fellow in the world. I only think he reckons without his host, in thinkking he can keep all old relations unbroken, when he puts a new mistress into the house, and such a mistress."

"But if she reall loves him"—

"Pshaw! she don't. That kind of woman can't love. They are like cats, that want to be stroked and caressed, and to be petted, and to lie soft and warm; and they will purr to any one that pet them, —that's all. As for love that leads to any self-sacrifice, they don't begin to know anything about it."

"Gracie, dear," said Miss Ferguson, "this sort of thing will never do. If you meet your brother in this way you will throw him off, and, may be, make a fatal breach. Meet it like a good Christian, as you are. You know," she said gently, "where we have a right to carry our troubles, and of whom we should ask guidance."

"Oh, I do know, Titia!" said Miss Grace; "but I am letting myself be wicked just a little, you know, to relieve my mind. I ought to put myself to school to make the best of it; but it came on me so very suddenly. Yes," she added, "I am going to take a course of my Bible and Fenelon before I get John—poor fellow."

"Well, I'll try to have faith," said Miss Grace; "but I do trust it will be some days before John comes down on me with his raptures,—men in love are such fools."

"But dear me!" said Miss Letitia, as her head turned accidently towards the window; "who is this riding up! Grace, as sure as you live, it is John himself!"

"John, himself!" repeated Miss Grace, becoming very pale.

"Now, do dear, be careful," said Miss Letitia. "I'll run out this back door and leave you alone;" and just as Miss Letitia's light heels were heard going down the back steps, John's heavy footsteps were coming up the front ones.

CHAPTER III.

THE SISTERS

Grace Seymour was a specimen of a class of whom we are happy to say New England possesses a great many.

She was a highly cultivated, intelligent and refined woman, arrived at the full age of maturo womanhood unmarried, and with no present thought or prospect of marriage. I presume all my readers, who are in a position to run over the society of our rural New England towns, can recall to their minds hundreds of such. They are woman too thoughtful, too conscientious, too delicate, to marry for anything but a purely personal affection; and this affection for various reasons has not fallen in their way.

The tendency of life in these towns is to throw the young men of the place into distant fields of adventure and enterprise in the far Western and Southern States, leaving at their old homes a population in which the feminine element largely predominates. It is not generally speaking the most cultivated or the most attractive of the brethern to remain in the place where they were born. The ardent, the daring, the enterprising are off to the ends of the earth; and the choice of the sisters to remain at home is, therefore, confined to a restricted list; and so it ends in these delightful rose-gardens of single woman which abound in New England,—women who remain at home as house keepers to aged parents, and charming persons in society; women over whose graces of conversation and manner the married men in their vicinity go off into raptures of eulogium, which generally end with, "Why hasn't that woman ever got married?"

It often happens to such women to expend on some brother that stock of heroworship and devotion which it has not came in their way to give to a nearer friend. Alas! it is building on a sandy foundation; for just as the union of hearts is complete, the chemical affinity which began in the cradle, and strengthens with every year of life, is dissolved by the introduction of that third element which makes of the brother a husband, while the new combination casts out the old,—sometime with a disagreeable effervescence.

John and Grace Seymour were two only children of a very affectionate family; and they had grown up in the closest habits of intimacy. They had written to each other long letters in which thought ful people who live in retired situations delight; letters not of outward events, but of sentiments and opinions, the phases of the inner life. They had studied and pursued courses of reading together. They had organized and carried on works of benevolence and charity.

The brother and sister had been left joint heirs of a large manufacturing property, employing hundreds of hands, in their vicinity; and the care and cultivation of those work-people, the education of their children, had been most conscientiously upon their minds. Half of every Sunday they devoted together to labour in the Sunday school of their manufacturing village; and the two worked so harmoniously together in the interests of their life, that Grace had never felt the want of any domestic ties or relations other than those that she had.

Our readers may perhaps, therefore, concede that among the new elements for their sympathy in this crss-grained world of ours, some few grins of it may properly be due to Grace.

Things are trials that try us; afflictions are what affect us; and under this head Miss Letitia, "and, hard as it is, we must make up our minds to love those those they bring to us. CHAPTER III.

THE SISTERS

I presume all my readers, who are in a position to run over the society of our rural New England towns, can recall to their minds hundreds of such. It often happens to such women to expend on some brother that stock of heroworship and devotion which it has not came in their way to give to a nearer friend. Alas! it is building on a sandy foundation; for just as the union of hearts is complete, the chemical affinity which began in the cradle, and strengthens with every year of life, is dissolved by the introduction of that third element which makes of the brother a husband, while the new combination casts out the old,—sometime with a disagreeable effervescence.

John and Grace Seymour were two only children of a very affectionate family; and they had grown up in the closest habits of intimacy. They had written to each other long letters in which thought ful people who live in retired situations delight; letters not of outward events, but of sentiments and opinions, the phases of the inner life. They had studied and pursued courses of reading together. They had organized and carried on works of benevolence and charity.

Half of every Sunday they devoted together to labour in the Sunday school of their manufacturing village; and the two worked so harmoniously together in the interests of their life, that Grace had never felt the want of any domestic ties or relations other than those that she had.

Our readers may perhaps, therefore, concede that among the new elements for their sympathy in this crss-grained world of ours, some few grins of it may properly be due to Grace.

Things are trials that try us; afflictions are what affect us; and under this showing, Grace was both tired and afflicted by the sudden engagement of her brother. When the whole groundwork on which one's daily life is built caves in, and falls into the cellar without one moment's warning, it is not in human nature to pick one's self up, and reconstruct and re-arrange in a moment.—So Grace thought, at any rate; but she made a hurried effort to dash back her tears, and gulp down a raising in her throat, anxious only to be selfish, and not to disgust her brother in the outset with any personal egotism.

So she ran to the front door to meet him, and fell into his arms, trying so hard to seem congratulatory and affectionate, that she broke out into sobbing.

"My dear Grace," said John, embracing and kissing her with that gusing fervor with which newly-engaged gentleman are apt to deluge every creature whome they meet, "you've got my letter. Well were you astonished?"

"O John, it is was so sudden!" was all poor Grace could say. "And you know, John since mother died, you and I have been all in all to each other,"

"And so we shall be, Grace. Why, yes, of coure we shall," he said, striking her hair, and playing with her trembling, thin, white hands. "Why, this only makes me love you the morenow; and you will love my little Lillie; for I know you can't help it. We shall both of us be happier for having her here."

"Well you know John I never saw her," said Grace, deprecatingly, "and so you can't wonder."

"Oh, yes, of course! Don't wonder in the least. It comes rather sudden.—and then you haven't seen her. Look, here is her photograph!" producing one from the most orthodox innermost region directly over his heard. "Look here! isn't it beautiful?"

"It is a very sweet face," said Grace, exerting herself to be sympathetic, and thankful that she could say that much truthfully.

"I can't imagine," said John, "what ever made her like me. You know she has refused half the fellows in the country. I hadn't the remotest idea that she would have anything to say to me; but you see there's no accounting for tastes;" and John plumed himself, as young gentlemen do, who have carried off prizes.

"You see," he added, "it's odd, but she took a fancy to me the first time she saw me. Now, you know, Grace, I found it easy to get along with ladies at first; but Lilly was the most extraordinary way of putting a fellow at his ease. Why, she made me feel like an old friend the first hour."

"Indeed."

"look here," said John, triumphantly drawing out his pocket-book, and producing thence a knot of rose-colored satin ribbon. "Did you ever see such a lovely color as this? It's so equisite, you see! Well, she is always wearing just such knots of ribbon, the most lovely shades. Why, there isn't one woman in a thousand could wear the things she dyes.—Everything becom s her. Sometimes it's rose color, or lace, or pale blue,—just the most trying things to others are what she can wear;

"Dear John, I hope you look for something deeper than the complexion in a wife", said Grtee, driven to moral reflection in spite of hers lf.

"Oh, of course!" said John: "she has such, soft, gentle, wining ways; she is so sympathetic; she's just the wife to make home happy, to be a bond of union to us all. Now in a wife, what we want is just that. Lillie's mind, for instance, hasn't been cultivated as your's and Letitia's. She isn't at all that sort of agirl. She's just a dear, gentle, little childing creature, that you'll delight in. You'll form her mind and she'll look up to you. You know she's young yet."

"Young, John!" Why she's seven and twenty," said grace with astonishment.

"Oh, no, my dear Grace, that is all a mistake. She told me herself she's only twenty. You see, the trouble is, she went into company injudiciously early, a mere baby, in fact; and that causes her to have the name of being older than she is. But I no assure you she's only twenty. She told me so herself."

"Oh, indeed!" said Grace, prudently choking back the contradiction which she longed to utter. "I know it seems a good many summers since I heard of her as the belle at Newport."

"Ah, yes, exactly! You see she went into company, as a young lady, when she was only thirteen. She told me all about it. Her parents were very injudicious, and they pushed her forward.—She regrets it now. She knows that wasn't the thing at all. She's very sensitive to the defects in her early education; but I made her understand that it was the heart more than the head I cared for. I dare say, Gracie, she'll fall into our little ways and without really knowing; and you, in point of fact, will be mistress of the house as much as you ever were. Lillie is delicate, and never had any care, and will be only too happy to depend on you. She's one of the gentle, dependent sort you know."

To this statement Grace did not reply. She only began sweeping together the debris of leaves and flowers which encombered the table, on which the newly errenged flower-vases were standing. Then she arranged the vases with great precision on the mantel-shelf. As she was doing it, so many memories rushed over her of that room and her mother, and the happy peaceful family life that had hitherto been led there, that she quite broke down; and sitting down in the chair, she covered her face, and went off into a good hearty crying spell.

Poor John was inexpressly shocked. He loved and revered his sister beyond anything in the world; and it occured to him in a dim wise, that to be suddenly dispossessed and shut out in the cold, when one has been the first object of affection, is to make the best of it a real and sore trial.

But Grace soon recovered herself, and rose up, smiling through her tears.—"What a fool I am making of myself!" said she. "The fact is John I am a little nervous. You mustn't mind it. You know," she said, laughing, "we old maids are like cats,—we find it hard to put out of our old routine. I dare say we shall be happier in the end for this, and I shall try to do all I can to make it so. Perhaps, John, I'd better take that little house of mine on Elm Street and set up my tent in it, and take all the old furniture and old pictures, and time things. You'll be wanting to modernize and make over this house you know, to suit a young wife."

"Nonsense, Grace; no such thing!" said John. "Do you suppose I want to leave all the pleasant associations of my life, and strip my home bare of all memorials, because I bring a little wife here! Why, the very idea of a wife is somebody to sympathize in your tastes; and Lillie will love and appeciate all these dear old things as you and I do. She has such a sympathetic heart! If you want to make me happy, Gracie, stay here, and let us live, as near as may be as before."

"So we will, John," said Grace, so cheerfully that John considered the whole matter as settled, and rushed upstairs to write his daily letter to Lillie.

Gems of Thought.

Kind words are the bright flowers of earth's existence; they make a very paradise of the humblest home the world can show. Use them, and especially around the fireside circle. They are jewels beyond price, and more precious to heal the wounded heart. and make the weighed-down spirit glad, than all other blessings the earth can give.

God has written on the flowers that sweeten the air; on the breeze that rocks the flower upon the stem; upon the raindrop that refreshes the sprig of moss that lifts its head in the desert; upon its deep chambers; upon every pencilled shell that sleeps in the cavern of the deep, no less than upon the mighty sun that warms and cheers millions of creatures which live in its light—upon all his works he has written, "None liveth for himself."

A SOLEMN THOUGHT.—To the watcher at night, how slowly and solemnly the clock tells the passing hours! In the daytime how the same sound is swallowed up in the hurrying tread of myriad feet, in the roll of carriages, in the thunder and shriek of the locomotive, and in the thousand and one mingled animate and inanimate voices that swell the chorus of a great city. Yet the moments flee all the same, and inscribe their indelible record for good or ill.

Masonry owes its unity, its strength, and its perpetuity to its non-interference with political and religious controversies. Had Masons, as such, participated in the political and religious disputes which have separated men into parties and sects—led to bloodshed and persecution—and brought into the lodges the prejudices, bigotry and intolerance engendered by partisan strife, Masonry would have failed to accomplish her great mission of charity, been disintegrated and wrecked in ages gone.

We forgive too little—forget to much.

A VAST number of attachments subsist on the common hatred of a third person.

WE are amused through the intellect, but it is the heart that saves us from ennui.

HE who serves ideas rather than men is never deceived. Ideas may triumph, or not; but they never cease to be themselves.

GRIEF.—We should feel sorrow, but not sink under its oppression; the heart of a wise man should resemble a mirror, which reflects every object without being sullied by any.

VIRTUE has this happiness, that she can subsist of herself, and knows how exist without admirers, partisans and protectors; want of assistance and approbation does not only affect her, but preserves, purifies, and renders her more perfect.

SECRET OF COMFORT.—As sometimes small evils, like invisable insects, inflict pains, and a single hair may stop a vast machine, the chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex one, in prudently cultivating an undergrowth of small pleasures, since very few great ones, alas! are of long duration.

WHERE education has been entirely neglected, or improperly managed, we see the worst passions ruling with uncontrolled and incessant ways. Good sense degenerates into craft, and anger rankles into malignity. Restraint, which is thought most judicious admonitions are urged in vain.

WHAT IS BEST TO BE DONE.—If you are suffering from rheumatism, lame back, sprains, strains or bruises, sick headache, tooth ache, cholic, bowel complaints, burns, frost bites, &c.; decidedly the best thing to get is a bottle of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer." The cost is trifling, and its effects certain. It is a never failing remedy, and no family should be without it. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Great Fires of the Past.

Among the great conflagrations of the past that of London in Sept. 1666, will always stand pre-eminent for its terrible destructiveness. It followed upon the great plague, which had carried off one-third of the population in the previous year, and swept over nearly five-sixths of the space included within the city wall- at that time. It lasted four days, and the ruins were 436 acres. It destroyed eighty-nine churches (including St. Paul's) the Royal Exchange, the Custom House, Guildhall, Zion College, and many other public buildings, besides 13,200 private houses. Four hundred streets were entirely laid waste, and about 200,000 of the inhabitants of the city were obliged to encamp for some time in the open fields of Islington and Highgate. The most disastrous fire in London since that date occured on the 25th of March; 1748, when 200 houses in the Cornhill Ward were destroyed. Many destructive fires have occured in the British metropolis at later dates, the most recent worthy of special note being the burning of the cotton and other warehouses of Tooley street in June and July, 1861. The fire continued raging with greater or less fury for nearly a month. Several persons were killed; and property destroyed to the value of £2,000,000.

On the 5th of May, 1842, a fire broke out in the city of Hamburgh, Germany, which raged with great fury for four days, destroying about one-third of the city. Sixty one streets, containing 1,747 houses, were utterly laid waste and thousands of people were rendered homeless. There were few public buildings destroyed, and that portion of the city was quickly rebuilt in a much more substantial manner than before.

In this country great fires, especially before the day of improved fire-engines, have been comparatively frequently, and New York has had her full share. In September, 1776, soon after the city came into the hands of the British, 500 houses were destroyed, forming at that time a large part of the town. The buildings were rather huddled together at the lower end of the island, and were mostly of wood, and the district west of Broadway and below Cortlandt street were bare. New York was visited by another conflagration, the gretest in its history, on the 16th of December, 1835. Six hundred warehouses, and property to the extent of over 20,000,000, were consumed. Our oldest inhabitants still remember the horrors of that terrible disaster. On the 6th of September, 1839, the city had another severe visitation, when forty-six buildings were destroyed. The next conflagration of large extent in this city took place on the 19th of July, 1845, when 302 stores and dwellings in the lower part of the city were destroyed. These, however, were of comparatively inferior value, the whole loss amounting to $6,000,000. Four lives were lost on this occasion. Since that time owing to the increased efficiency of the means employed to prevent and extinguish fires, they have generally been confined to a single building or a small group.

In the same year of the last great fire in New York, 1845, Quleo suffered terrible from the same destroying element. On the 28th of May, a fire broke in the Faubourgh St. Roch, which destroyed 1,500 buildings before it could be quelled. Several lives were also lost. Exactly one month later 1,300 buildings were burnt, and by these two conflagrations nearly two-thirds of the city was laid in ruins. The pecuniary loss has been stated at $8,000,000. In the same year, on the 12 of June, nearly the whole town of St. Johns, Newfoundland, was destroyed, and 6,000 people were rendered homeless.

Albany suffered from a great conflagration on the 9th of September, 1848. Six hundred buildings, besides steam boats, piers and other property, valued altogether at $3,000,000, were burned. Twenty-four acres of land within the city limits were covered with ruins.

St Louis had a great fire in May, 1849, when fifteen blocks of houses and twenty-three steamboats were consumed, causing a loss of over $3,000,000.

Philadelphia has been very fortunate in having very few great fires, but one occured in that city on the 9th of July, 1850, which destroyed 350 buildings. These were of inferior value, and the whole loss was but $1,500,000, though twenty-five persons were killed, nine drowned, and 120 injured.

A large portion of San Francisco was destroyed in 1851. On the 3rd of May a fire broke out which consumed nearly 2,500 buildings, causing a loss of $3,500,000 and several lives. A little over a month later, on the 22nd of June, 500 more buildings were burned, valued at $3,000,000 or more.

Twelve acres of land in Syracuse were burnd over on the 8th of November, 1856. About 100 buildings were destroyed, and the loss of property amounted to $1,000,000.

The scene most naturally recalled by this fearful disaster in Chicago is the terrible celebration of the Fourth of July in Portland, Me., in 1866. The lasting facts of that great event are still fresh in the public mind. The fire, begining in a boot shop in High street, swept north, and destroyed in its course nearly one half of the city. The pecuniary loss was about $15,000,000, and one-fourth of the population were rendered houseless.

It seems probable from the reports thus far received that the terrible fire in Chicago has no parallel in modern history, unless in the conflagrations kindled by war. Even the great fire of London, though relatively more destructive, did not equal it in absolute extent. The London of that day was little more than two-thirds the size of the Chicago of today, having less than 250,000 inhabitants; and it, as reported, two-thirds. Chicago is in ruins, the desolated territory is far greater than the fire-area of London said to have been laid waste in 1666.—N. Y World.

Our contemporary omits in this list our own great fire in 1851, which laid waste so large a portion of the eastern part of the city. He also omits the last great fire in Quebec.—Witness.

FURS---ATTENTION.

The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general, that he has compared his own manufactures, in furs, against the manufactures of Montreal and Toronto house-; and he can, with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.

Montreal and Toronto shows a good sample in dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.

He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a sure guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.

The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.

I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as strangers, to the inspection of my furs, which are not represented under fictitious names.

CANADA MY HOME.—A new patriotic song; published by A. Christie, 34 King Street east, Toronto. Songs calculated to increase and intensify patriotism, should be more numerous in our young Dominion, and we hail with delight "Canada my Home," as one of this class. It is only 25 cts.

FOR KANSAS.—Mr. John McKee and family, of Smith, left here for Kansas on Tuesday morning; also, Mr. G Chalmers, and Mr. G. Donnelly, for the purpose of seeing the country, and if it pleases them, making their abode there. We believe there is a settlement in that state known as the Canadian settlement, nearly all of which are from this county, and all highly pleased with the country. In a letter from an old resident of Cavan, now in that state we learn that the soil is good, and water pure, comparing favorably with that of Canada. The air clear and bracing; Canadians enjoying it very much. The state is rapidly filling up, and the land daily, almost, increasing in value. They, also, like the country very much, as the surface is not broken with swamp, rocks or barren sand districts, but for hundreds of miles of fertile plains, with springs and streams of pure water It is sold in 80 or 160 acre lots, at prices varying from $2 to $5 and $8 according to improvements. Horses sell from $100 to $130; Oxen, per yoke. $100 to $150; Cows $25 to $40; Pork $5 to $7; Fall wheat $1; Spring 70 cts.; oats 20 cts. to 25 cts. and potatoes 25 to 30 cts. The inconvenience is scarcity of fencing timber and building timber. The fencing at present consists of posts and wire at a cost of 10 cts per post, and wire at a cost of 30 cts per rod; but osage orange is cultivated for fences, and after a very few years makes a very good one, we believe. The same correspondent says that he built a house for himself 33x23, twelve feet post, fifteen feet rafters, and containing a small hall and nine rooms, the full cost of timber, doors, sashes, locks, nails, butts and labour, was $300, which certainly cannot be considered out of the way compared with prices here. All who have gone from this section of the country are doing well and although they are now in the dominions of Uncle Sam, we sincerely wish that they may continue to prosper.

PERSONAL.—We give a pretty full report of the Banquet given in honor of J. W. Fitzgerald, Esq. P. L. S., on his departure for New Brunswick. Mr. Fitzgerald and family left on Thursday evening. He has received an appointment on the Engineering staff of the Intercolonial Railway, and expects, therefore, to be away during the construction of that road. All shades of politicians cast aside their difference to do him honor, and all classes of religious opinions were well represented at the banquet In political contests we have always had Mr. Fitzgerald against us, but his course was open and independent. He let us know that he was against us. It is a good sign of the times that these things can be dropped, and that we can agree to meet on such occasions as Wednesday evening, and feel that all are citizens of a common country and have a community of interests. Mr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald have the good wishes of a host of warm friends here, and we may be permitted to express the hope that they may long enjoy good health and prosperity, whether in Ontario or New Brunswick, and that when the Intercolonial is completed, that they may see fit again to take up their residence here and enjoy the continued good. will of their friends.

PERSONAL.—We are very sorry to learn that our very esteemed citizen, T. M. Fairbairn, Esq., is about to take up his residence in Lindsay for the purpose of the practice of his profession, we regret that this is necessary, owing to private arrangements that cannot easily be controlled Mr. Fairbairn had a very extensive practice here, and was an amiable and worthy citizen. Lindsay's gain will be our loss; as we doubt not but Mr. Fairbairn will soon establish an extensive practice in his new place of residence. We cordially recommend our friends in Victoria, requiring legal advice, to patronize Him, as his extensive practice in the past in Common law and Chancery has gained for him a goodna me, and fame which we know he will fully sustain in Lindsay, or wherever he may take up his residence. The Christian community, too, will find him a faithful friend and co-worker.

CONCERTS.—We understand that Mr. D Galletly will give a Concert in Keene, on Hallowe'en. Mr. G. will also give Concerts during the winter in all the villages, of which due notice will be given. Mr. Galletly is a splendid singer, and will be assisted by other local talent. We trust the Keene people will give him a full house. He renders scottish songs about as well as Kennedy.

Complimentary Banquet to J. W. Fitzgerald, Esq., P. L. S.

The numerous friends of J. W. Fitzgerald, Esq., having learned that he was about to remove from Peterboro, for service on the engineering staff of the Intercolonial Railway, entertained him at a splendid banquet, got up on Wednesday evening last, by Mr. Turver for the occasion. It is unnecessary to say that the whole thing was in Mr. Turver's best style, and was decidedly a very pleasant and agreeable affair.

Mayor Scott presided—on his right sat Mr. Fitzgerald, the guest of the evening, and on his left T. M. Fairbairn, Esq., M. P.P., D. G. Hatton, Esq occupied the vice chair; we noticed among those present Jas, Chalmers, T. Buck, T. G. Hazlitt, Esqs Messrs Dumble. Edmison. Leonard, of the legal profession, Messrs. Kincaid and O'Sullivan of the medical, Messrs. Bertram, Gibbons, Moloney, Harty, Doharty, Lowry, of the Mercantile and Manufacturing interests, and many others, in in all, over forty gentlemen were present. After doing ample justice to the splendid spread of Mr. Turver, the chairman gave the usual loyal toasts of the "Queen," the "Royal Family." "Governor-General" and "Lieut.-governor," &c., all of which was received with enthusiasm. but that of our beloved Queen was received with rapturous applause The "Army," "Navy" and "Volunteers," and "Local Legislature," were all duly honored. Dr. Kincaid and T. Clementi returning thanks on behalf of the Volunteers and T. M. Fairbairn acknowledged the toast of the Local Legislature, in very appropriate terms. He was certain they all fully appreciated the duties and powers of the Local Legislature. He was, of course, unable yet to speak fully of that honorable body, but hoped on some future occasion to speak to the subject of the toast. He, Mr. Fairbairne, felt that it must be very gratifying to Mr. Fitzgerald to see so many friends of all shades of politics and positions, doing him honor, and and trusted that, although removing to the Maritime Provinces, Peterboro would still have a sunny spot in his memory, and it was a matter of great satisfaction, surely, to be able to look back and think of the cordiality with which they all met on this occasion.

The chairman then proposed the toast of the evening, "Our Guest," J. W. Fitzgerald, Esq. A gentleman, high in the estimation of all present, and of the community generally, and stood high, not only in this community, but in other communities, and was deservedly respected before he came to Peterborough at all. He was the first friend the speaker met in Peterboro when he first came to it. He, Mr. Fitzgerald, then extented to him the hand of friendship, and he had been a constant friend since, a true friend. He was never wanting in the noble principles of an honest man, a true friend, and a gentleman. He had, therefore, the greater pleasure in proposing health, prosperity and long life to J. W. Fitzgerald, Esq.

Dr. O'Sullivan then favored with a song.

Mr. Fitzgerald then returned thanks for the manner in which his name had been received and drank. He said he felt it difficult to express in fitting words the gratitude he felt for the kindness manifested on the present occasion. It was a sources of pleasure to him, and no doubt to every man, to know that he was held in esteem by his fellow citizens, and it certainly very pleasant to him to learn that after a residence of several years he could now find that an honest, straight-forward course, which he attempted to pursue, gained the good-will and praise of the people. He had always advocted what he believed right, just and equal to all, and he ever felt that what he claimed for himself should be freely granted to others, and this he was always ready to do. When he looked around the table and saw so many of all shades of opinions and pursuits he felt doubly grateful for the very marked respect which was manifested.

The chairman then read the following address:—

To James W. Fitzgerald, Esq.,

DEAR FRIEND:—We who are here assembled to-night friends with whom you have become acquainted since you made Peterboro your home, have, on the occasion of your approaching departure from our Town, determined that an expression of our esteem for you, and our appreciation of the kindly feelings always displayed by you, was due to you ere your departure; and by our presence here to-night, and by this humble address, it is our intention that such esteem and appreciation should in a slight degree be marked.

Though but a few short years a resident among us, the time has been sufficient to show us many of the qualities which you possess, and long ere did many of us discover that you possessed those qualities and perceptions of heart and mind which should endear you to those whose acquaintance with you was of such an intimate character as to be aware of the merits of him whom they were delighted and honored to call friend; and, although your intercourse with some has sometimes been that of opposing parties, we have always found you possessing and exhibiting a manly firm and determined front which did not fail to command our respect.

While expressing our keen regret for the necessity which is about to deprive us of the pleasure of your society, and the benefits of your professional labors, we cannot but congratulate ourselves and our country in having on the most important work at present progressing in our fair Dominion—the Intercolonial Railway—the services of you, who have during your residence in Canada, shown yourself justly entitled to pre-eminence in the profession to which you belong.

We do not fail to recognize the fearless and intrepid manner in which you have, during our acquaintance with you, always, despite opposing influences, and notwithstanding the fact that your pecuniary interests would have been better preserved by pursuing a different course, maintained your views on all questions; and many will regret the absence of him, who, at the risk of loss to himself, acted so fearlessly in maintaining their views on such questions. Your absence will, as well, be regretted in our social circles, the pleasure of which have been wont to be enchanced by your presence, and cannot fail to cause a void not easily filled.

Feeling as we do towards you we must, however, submit to that separation for which there is necessity, while expressing the hope that when your labours and various duties will have been performed, you, Mrs. Fitzgerald and family, will once more give us an opportunity of renewing the now existing ties by a return to Peterboro, and permanent residence therein

With every wish for the future health, happiness and prosperity of yourself and Mrs. Fitzgerald and family.

Peterboro, October 13th, 1871.

To this Mr. Fitzgerald replied:—That it was a great pleasure to be present. It was gratifying to find that so many of the good citizens of Peterboro were willing to cast aside their avocations and meet at that festive board out of respect to him. And when I see the representatives of the intelligence and the wealth of progressive Peterboro, presided over by you, Sir, our worthy Mayor, I cannot feel otherwise than deeply moved at so great a mark of respect, unmerited respect, indeed, to me. Although little identified with the trade or commerce of our prosperous Town—my occupation lying in another direction. I, nevertheless, have always felt and do feel a lively interest in its growth and prosperity. When I passed through the streets of Peterborough thirteen years ago, when I first came to it, and walks through our streets to-day, but will be struck with amazement at its rapid growth from a comparatively small town to an embryo city.

Small wooden houses have been replaced by large and stately ranges of brick buildings, every one of which are occupied and, no doubt, doing a good business. Streets have been opened up; gas is introduced; and I trust, shortly, suitable and capacious Water Works will be erected, for if we are to take a lesson from the late calamitous fire that destroyed in a few days the most rapidly growing city in the world—not a day should be lost.

Mr. Chairman, I am occupying too long the attention of this company. To-morrow I shall be leaving Peterboro for some time, for my destination in New Brunswick. And it is a source of much satisfaction to me, that, although I leave the people of Peterboro, I go to serve under a Peterboro man, a man who by his perseverance, integrity and great talent in his profession, has raised himself to a position of distinction and eminence unattained by any man on this Continent or perhaps in the world, I mean Mr. Sandford Fleming, the son-in law of our respective Sheriff. At this moment his staff of engineers extends from Halifax to Quebec and from Ottawa away in the direction of the fertile plains of the Saskatchewan to the Rocky Mountains and British Columbia; and I may tell you that by every one engaged in his vast service, Mr. Fleming is respected and willingly obeyed. In a short time the Intercolonial Railway, with which I have the honor to be associated, will be completed and in exchange for the produce of beautiful Ontario which will be borne eastwards, you shall have the coal and iron of Nova Scotia, and your share of the inexhaustible fisheries of the maritime provinces. Mr. Chairman, I will now conclude by wishing Peterboro and its people all peace, harmony and prosperity; and in the words of a poet of another country, slightly altered to suit the case of our New Dominion, say:—

"O brave young men our hope our pride our promise,
On you our hearts are set—
In manliness, in kindliness, in justice
To make of Canada a nation yet.

I accept, Sir, this address from you and this the more because I think it is the expression of good will and of friendship, and hence I shall treasure it

On behalf of Mrs. Fitzgerald and family, permit me to return my sincere thanks. I shall convey to her the kind expression of good will it contains. I hope again to return to Peterboro and to remain with you; and if I do, I hope I shall then find every person present enjoying good health happiness and prosperity.

The Vice-chair then gave the "Mayor and Corporation," which was well received.

The Mayor and Councillors Edmison and Doharty responded.

Mr. Bertram have the "Bench and the Bar." The "bench" he believed, had the respect of the people of the country, and the "bar" was not behind the "bar" of any country in the world.

Messrs. Dumble, Leonard and Hatton, responded: Mr. Dumble said that he believed that the Bench of Canada deserved the respect of the people of Canada; the members of it were worthy and honorable men, an honor to the position they occupied. The Bar, too, although not always considered so by litigants, was equal in talent, integrity and honor, to the Bar of England or Ireland.

Mr. Leonard regretted that he had been called upon. He could not claim the honor of speaking for the Bar, but he aspired to the honor and hoped to be a member soon.

Mr. Hatton then gave the "Medical Profession." To which Drs. Kincaid and O'Sullivan replied. Dr. Kincaid passed a merited elogium on the members of his profession, and concluded by saying that he would leave Dr. O'Sullivan to reply chiefly; which he did very handsomely. He remarked that every person should love his profession. He thought, too, that the medical men of Peterboro were an honor to the Town; they endeavored to know no class, creed, or politics, in the discharge of their duty. They visited those suffering the most malignant types of disease, and their only ambition was to relieve the aches and pains and poverty of those afflicted; and he could truly say that the good ladies of Peterboro were not behind in aiding the profession in their work of love and charity. It was a pleasing thought that the profession, while visiting surrounding towns in the discharge of their duties to assist others, never had to send for help to neighboring towns. They sought to depend on merit for popular favor, and hoped to gain it that way. He then passed a well merited tribute of praise on Mr. Fitzgerald for kindness, honesty and independence. A kind friend he had always been to him, and his advice to him (Dr O'Sullivan) when arriving in Peterboro first, can never be forgotten, when he told him, (Dr. O'S.) depend on your own merit for success, the merit of others is a poor foundation to build on The Dr. also made mention of the hospitality and charitableness of Mrs. Fitzgerald, who required only to be known to be esteemed.

Mr. Dumble then gave the "Mercantile and Manufacturing interests." Replied to by Messrs. Bertram, Lemay, T. Buck, of Otonabee, and others "The Ladies" and "The Press" were also duly remembered. Then followed several Volunteer toasts. Dr. O'Sullivan giving "Mrs. J W Fitzgerald"—responded to by Mr. Fitzgerald. Mr Hatton giving the "Host and Hostess" for which Mr. Turver returned thanks.

The party then separated, having spent a very pleasant evening—and all wishing Mr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald a happy sojurn in the Eastern Province.

The Chicago Tribune says to the people of that ill fated city:—

"Cheer up! In the midst of calamity without parallel in the world's history, looking upon the ashes of thirty years' accumulation, the people of this beautiful city are resolved that Chicago shall rise again with vigor.

"With $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 of our hard-earned property sweept away in a few hours, the hearts of our men and women are still brave, and the look into the future with unbanned hearts.

"As their has never been such a calamity, so has there never been such cheerful fortitude in the face of desolation and ruin

"Already contracts have been made for rebuilding some of the burned blocks, and the clearing away of the debris will begin to-day if the heat is so far subdued that the charred material can be handled.—Field, Ioiter & Co., and John Farwell & Co., will commence business to-day. The money and securities in the bank are safe. The railroads are working with their energies to bring us out of our affliction.—

"The $300,000,000 of capital invested in these ruins are bound close us through. They have been built with special reference to a great commercial want at this place, and cannot fail to sustain it.

"As Chicago must raise again, we do not belittle the calamity that has fallen upon us The world has probably never seen the like of it; certainly not since Moscow was burned.

"Ten or twenty years may be required to reconstruct our fair city, but capital will rebuild it, and fire-proof will be forthcoming.

"The losses we have suffered must be borne, but the pluck, time and men are here. Commence at the bottom and work up again—not at the bottom neither—for we have credit in every land, and the experiences of one building in Chicago to help us.

"Let us all cheer up, and save what yet is left, and we shall come out right. The Christian world is coming to our relief—the worst is over. In few days more the danger will be passed, and we can resume the battle of life with Christian faith and Western grit. Let us all cheer up."

The department of Public Works at Ottawa some two or three months ago sent out a Pacific Railway surveying party. A member of this party published in the Toronto Telegraph a letter, stating that the whole party were in danger of starvation, through the neglect of the Department of Public Works as "an institution which appears to exist for the sole purpose of spending money where it should not be spent, and wilfully neglect to spend money where it should be spent."

The Telegraph concludes this article on the subject by saying:—

"Just now it may serve the purpose of Mr. Langevin and his understrappers to maintain a discreet silence touching this matter But the truth can probably be reached more effectually without their assistance than with it. The surveying party will return some day—provided they do not starve to death in the wilderness—and then we shall ascertain the facts in full; and ascertain them soon enough to make their publication tell against the incompetent officials, high and low, of that peculiarly managed institution which, by right of custom, continues to be called the 'Department of Public Works'."

Something surely must be in the wind when the Telegraph uses language like this.

The Kingston Whig says;—There is no present talk of the Legislature of Ontario assembling. This is October, and the two months' notice advertisement of private bills not having yet appeared, it would seem that the Ontario Parliament will not meet until after Christmas. There is no immediate necessity of its meeting soon, and as Mr. Sandfield Macdonald has a good deal of work to do ere he would like to face the Legislature, in all likelihood after Christmas will be the time.

THE CANADA FARMER for October is received. The Farmer needs no praise, it should be in every farmers house. It is only a dollar a year.

PETET'S MUSICAL MONTHLY for November is now before us and continues fourteen pieces of new and popular music worth 20 to 40 cts. each, yet single copies of the Musical Monthly can be obtained at any bookstore or from the publishers for 30 cts.

"THE STEP AT THE GATE."—We have received Whitney's Musical Guest for October, and find among its many attractions the beautiful song and chorus under the above title, together with "Plant a Few Little Flowers," "Irving Quickstep," "Idlewild Walss," "Light Will Greet Thee by and by," and "The Bible save we may;" also a large amount of musical news, &c., combining in all, just such a musical journal as every family should have. The publisher now proposes to send the Guest three months on trial, for only twenty five cents. When four dollars worth of music can be obtained for so small a sum, we think no one will fail to avail themselves of this liberal offer. Price $1.00 per annum; specimen copy 10 cents Published monthly by W. W. Whitney, Toledo, O.

What is Scotland soon to be?
Learned men for novels vote;
Her ministers cry most we see,
For the Books of Walter Scott.
In Scotland there's been great ado
About Sir Walter Scott,
Numbering him among the few
Who wonderous books have wrote.
Had otherwise his mind been bent,
He'd shed a brighter ray.
Time, reading novls, is ill spent—
Is wholy thrown away.
"Find I my time spent," once one said,
"Reading the 'Waverly';
A poor account I'd have to make
To God at the last day;
Grim Death that changes man's proud looks,
His soul from earth to free.
Made Scott call for the book of books,
His comforter to be,
Had he through life made it his stay.
As at the last he sought,
More comfort when he passed away,
Sir walter would have got;
The great ado than some have made,
Bring on their craft a blot;
'tis Book o books they've laid aside for the books o Scott.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. It wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, believed from its cures, many of which are truly marvelous. Inveterate cases of scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were progressively growing more and more distressing, and which were they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or its cures.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and subtle agent of ill organizes in undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, in time, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Pile, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Uterous affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for clearing those obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Incrustions, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute Directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

The Watchman's Cry.

Hark! 'tis the watchman's cry,
Wake, brethren, wake,
Jesus our Lord, is nigh,
Wake, brethren, wake.
Sleep is for sons of night,
Ye are children of the light,
Yours is the glory bright;
Wake, brethren, wake.

Call to each waking band,
Watch, brethren, watch!
Clear is our Lord's command,
Watch, brethren, watch!
Be ye as men that wait
Always at the Master's gate,
E'en though He tarry late;
Watch, brethren, watch!

Heed we the Steward's call,
Work, brethren, work!
There's room enough for all,
Work, brethren, work!
This vineyard of the Lord
Constant labor will afford,
Your's is a sure reward;
Work, brethren, work!

Hear we the Shepherd's voice,
Pray, brethren, pray!
Would ye His heart rejoice!
Pray, brethren, pray!
Sin calls for constant fear,
Weakness needs the strong One near,
Long as ye struggle here,
Pray, brethren, pray!

Now sound the final chord,
Praise, brethren, praise!
Thrice holy is our Lord,
Praise, brethren, praise!
What more befits the tongues,
Soon to lead the angel's songs,
While heaven the note prolongs!
Praise, brethren, praise!

PREPARATIONS FOR MARRIAGE.

Miss Lillie Ellis was sitting upstairs in her virgin bower, which was now converted into a tumultuous, seething caldron of millinery and mantua-making, such as usually precedes a wedding. To be sure orders had been forthwith dispatched to Paris for the bridal regimentals, and for a good part of the trousseau: but that did not seem in the least to stand in the way of the time-honored confusion of sewing preparations at home, which is supposed to waste the strength and exhaust the health of every bride elect.

Whether young women, while disengaged, do not have proper underclothing, or whether they contemplate marriage as an awful gulf which swallows up all future possibilities of replenishing a wardrobe, —certain it is that no sooner is a girl engaged to be married than there is a blind and distracting rush and pleasure and haste to make up for her immediately a stock of articles, which, up to that hour, she has managed to live very comfortably and respectably without. It is astonishing to behold the number of inexpressible things with French names which unmarried young ladies never think of wanting, but which there is a desperate push to supply, and have ranged in order, the moment the matrimonial state is in contemplation.

Therefore it was that the virgin bower of Lillie was knee-deep in a tangled mass of stuff of various hues and description; that the sharp sound of tearing off breadths resounded there; that Miss Clippins and Miss Snippins and Miss Nippins were sewing there day and night; that a sewing machine was busily rattling in mamma's room; and there were all sorts of pinking, and spilling, and braiding, and hemming, and whipping and ruffling, and over-sewing, and cat-stitching and hemming, and other female mysteries going on.

As for Lillie, she lay in a loose negligé on the bed, ready every five minutes to be called up to have something measured, or tried on, or fitted; and to be consulted whether there should be fifteen or sixteen tucks and then an insertion or sixteen tucks, and a series of puffs. Her labors were upon her; and it was smilingly observed by Miss Clippina across to Miss Nippins, that Miss Lillie was beginning to show her "engagement bones." In the midst of these preoccupations, a letter was handed her by the giggling chambermaid. It was a thick letter directed in a bold honest hand. Miss Lillie took it with a languid little yawn, finished the last sentences in a chapter of the novel she was reading, and then leisurely broke the seal, and glanced it over. It was the one that the enraptured John had spent his morning in writing.

"Miss Ellis, now, if you'll try on this jacket—oh! I beg your pardon," said Miss Clippins, observing the letter, "we can wait of course;" and all there laughed as if something very pleasant was in their minds.

"No," said Lillie, giving the letter a toss, "it'll keep," and she stood up to have a jaunty little blue jacket, with its pluffy bordering of swan's down, fitted upon her.

"It's too bad, now, to take you from your letter," said Miss Clippins, with a sly nod.

"I'm sure you take it philosophically," said Miss Nippins, with a giggle.

"Why should I?" said the divine Lillie. "I get one every day; and it's all the old story. I've heard it ever since I was born."

"Well, now, to be sure you have, Let's see," said Miss Clippins, "this is the seventy-fourth or seventy-fifth offer, was it?"

"Oh, you must ask mamma! she keeps the lists: I'm sure I don't trouble my head," said the little beauty; and she looked so natty and jaunty when she said it, just arching her queenly white neck, and making soft, downy dimples in her cheeks as she gave her fresh little child-like laugh; turning round and round before the looking-glass, and issuing her orders for the fitting of the jacket with a precision and real interest which showed that there were things in the world which didn't become old stories, even if one had been used to them ever since one was born.

Lillie was never caught napping when the point in question was the fit of her clothes.

When released from the little blue jacket, there was a rose-colored morning dress to be tried on, and a grave discussion as to whether the honiton lace was to be set on plain or frilled.

So important was this case, that mamma was summoned from the sewing-machine to give her opinion. Mrs. Ellis was a fat, fair, rosy matron of most undisturbed conscience and digestion, whose main business in life had always been to see to her children's clothes. She had brought up Lillie with faithful and religious zeal; that is to say, she had always ruffled her under-clothes with her own hands, and darned her stockings, sick or well; and also, as before intimated, kept a list of her offers, which she was ready in confidental moments to tell off to any of her acquaintance. The question of ruffled or plain honiton was of such vital importance, that the whole four took some time in considering it in its various points of view.

"Sarah Selfridge had hers ruffled," said Lillie.

"And the effect was perfectly sweet," said Miss Clippins.

"Perhaps, Lillie, you had better have it ruffled," said mammma.

"But three rows laid on plain has such a lovely effect," said Miss Nippins.

"Perhaps then, she had better have three rows laid on plain, said mamma.

"Or she might have one row ruffled on the edge, with three rows laid on plain, with a satin," said Miss Chippins, "That's the way I fixed Miss Elliott's."

"That would be a nice way," said mamma. "Perhaps, Lillie, you'd better have it so."

"Oh! come now, all of you, just hush," said Lillie, "I know just how I want it done."

The words may sound a little rude and dictatorial; but Lillie had the advantage of always looking so pretty, and saying dictatorial things in such a sweet voice, that everybody was delighted with them; and she took the matter of arranging her trimming in hand with a clearness of head which showed that it was a subject to which she had given mature consideration. Mrs. Ellis shook her fat sides with a comfortable motherly chuckle.

And, when all the trying on and arranging of folds, and frills, and pinks and bows was over, Lillie threw herself comfortably upon the bed, to finish her letter.

"Seems to me your letters don't meet with a very warm reception," she said.

"Well! every day, and such long ones!" Lillie answered, turning over the pages. "See there," she went on, opening the drawer, "what a heap of them! I can't see, for my part, what any one can want to write a letter every day to anybody for. John is such a goose about me."

"He'll get over it after he's been married six months," said Miss Clippins, nodding her head with the air of a woman that has seen life.

"I'm sure I shan't care," said Lillie with a toss of her pretty head. "It's borous any way."

Our readers may perhaps imagine from the story thus far, that our little Lillie is by no means the person in reality, that John supposes her to be, when he sits thinking of her with such devotion, and writing her such long "borous" letters.

She is not. John is in love, not with the actual Lillie Ellis, but with that ideal personage who looks like his mother's picture, and is the embodiment of all his mother's virtues. The feeling as it exists in John's mind is not only a most respectable, but in fact a truly divine one, and one that no mortal man ought to be ashamed of. The love that quickens all the nature, that make a man twice manly, and makes him aspire to all that is high, pure, sweet and religious is a feeling so sacred, that no unworthiness in its object can make it any less beautiful. More often than not it is spent on an utter vacancy. Men and women both pass through this divine imitation—this sacred inspiration of nature—and find, when they have come into the innermost shrine, where the divinity ought to be, that there is no god or goddess there; nothing but the cold black ashes of commonplace vulgarity and selfishness. Both of them, when the grand discovery has been made, do well to fold their robes decently about them; and make the best of the matter. If they cannot love, they can at least be friendly. They can tolerate, as philosophers; pity, as Christians; and, finding just where and how the burden of an ill-assorted union galls the least, can then and there strap it on their backs, and walk on, not only without complaint, but sometimes in a cheerful and hilarious spirit.

Not a word of all this our friend John, as he sits longing, aspiring and pouring out his heart, day after day, in letters that interrupt Lillie in the all-important responsibility of getting her wardrobe fitted

Shall we think this smooth, little fair-skinned Lillie is a cold-hearted monster, because her heart does not beat faster at these letters which she does not understand, and which strike her as unnecessarily prolix and prosy? Why should John insist on telling her his feelings and opinions on a vast variety of subjects that she does not care a button for? She doesn't know anything about ritualism and anti-ritualism; and, what's more, she doesn't care. She hates to hear so much about religion. She thinks it's pokey. John may go to any church he pleases, for all her. As to all that about his favorite poems, she don't like poetry—never could—don't see any sense in it; and John will be quoting over so much in his letters. Then, as to the love parts—it may be all quite new and exciting to John; but she has as she said, heard that story over and over again; till it strikes her as quite a matter of course. Without doubt the whole world is a desert where she is not; the thing has been asserted, over and over, by so many gentlemen of credible character for truth and veracity, that she is forced to believe it; and she cannot see why John is to be particularly pitied on this account. He is in no more desperate state about her than the rest of them; and secretly Lillie has as little pity for her lover's pangs as a nice little white cat has for mice. They amuse her; they are appropriate recreation; and she pats and plays with each mouse in succession, without any comprehension that it may be a serious thing for him.

When Lillie was a little girl, eight years old, she used to sell her kisses through the slats of the fence for papers of candy, and thus early acquired the idea that her charms were a capital to be employed in trading for the good things of life. She had the misfortune—and a great one it is—to have been singularly beautiful from the cradle; and so was praised and exclaimed over and caressed as she walked through the streets. She was sent for, far and near; borrowed to be looked at; her pictures taken by photographers. If one reflects how many foolish and inconsiderate people there are in the world, who have no scruple in making a pet and plaything of a pretty childe, one will see how this one unlucky lot of being beautiful in childhood spoiled Lillie's chances of an average share of good sense and goodness. The only hope for such a case lies in the chance of possessing judicious parents. Lillie had not these. Her father was a shrewd grocer, and nothing more; and her mother was a competent cook and housekeeper. While he traded in sugar and salt, and she made pickles and embroidered under linen, the pretty Lillie was educated as pleased Heaven.

Pretty girls, unless they have wise mothers, are more educated by the opposite sex than by their own. Put them where you will, there is always some man busying himself in their instruction; and the burden of masculine teaching is generally about the same, and might be stereotyped as follows: "You don't need to be or do anything. Your business in life is to look pretty, and amuse us. You don't need to study: you know all by nature that a woman need to know. You are, by virtue of being a pretty woman, superior to anything we can teach you; and we wouldn't for the world, have you anything but what you are." When Lillie went to school, that is what her masters whispered in her ear as they did her sums for her, and helped her through her lessons and exercises, and looked into her eyes. This was what her young gentlemen friends, themselves delving in Latin and Greek and mathematic, told her, when they came to recreate from their severer studies in her smile. Men are held to account for talking sense. Pretty women are told that lively nonsense is their best sense. Now and then, an admirer bolder than the rest, ventured to take Lillie's education more earnestly in hand, and recommended to her just a little reading,—enough to enable her to carry on conversation, and appear to know something of the ordinary topics discussed in society,—but informed her, by the by, that there was no sort of need of being either profound or accurate in these matters, as the mistakes of a pretty woman had a grace of their own.

At seventeen, Lillie graduated from Dr. Sipthrope's school, with a "finished education." She had, somehow or other, picked her way through various "ologies" and exercises supposed to be necessary for a well-informed young lady. She wrote a pretty hand, spoke French with a good accent, and could turn a sentimental note neatly. "and that, my dear," said Dr. Sipthorpe to his wife, "is all that a woman needs, who so evidently is intended for wife and mother as our little Lillie." Dr. Sipthorpe, in fact, had amused himself with a semipaternal flirtation with his pupil during the whole course of her school exercises, and parted from her with tears in his eyes, greatly to her amusements; for Lillie, after all, estimated his devotion at just about what it was worth. It amused her to see him make a fool of himself.

Of course the next thing was—to be married; and Lillie's life now became a round of dressing, going to watering-places, travelling, and in other ways seeking the fulfilment of her destiny.

She had precisely the accessible, easy softness of manner that leads every man to believe that he may prove a favourite, and her run of offers became quite a source of amusement. Her arrival at watering-places was noted in initials in the papers; her dress on every public occasion was described; and, as acknowledged queen of love and beauty, she had everywhere her little court of men and women flatterers. The women flatterers around a belle are as much a part of the cortege as the men. They repeat the compliments they hear, and burn incense in the virgin's bower at hours when the profaner sex may not enter.

The life of a petted creature consists essentially in being deferred to, for being pretty and useless. A pretty child runs a great risk, if it is ever to outgrow childhood; but a pet woman is a perpetual child. The pet woman of society is everybody's toy. Everybody looks at her, admires her, praises and flatters her, stirs her up to play off her little airs and graces for entertainment; and passes on. Men of profound sense encourage her to chatter nonsense for their amusement, just as we delight in the tottering steps and stammering mispronunciations of a golden-haired child. When Lillie has been in Washington, she has had judges of the supreme court and secretaries of state delighted to have her opinions in their respective departments. Scholars and literary men flocked around her, to the neglect of many a more instructed woman satisfied that she knew enough to blunder agreeably on every subject.

Nor is there anything in the Christian civilization of our present century that condemns the kind of life we are describing, as in any respect unwomanly or becoming. Something very like it is in a measure considered as the appointed rule of attractive young girls till they are married.

Lillie had numbered among her admirers many lights of the Church. She had flirted with bishops, priests, and deacons,—who, none of them, would, for the world have been so ungallant as to quote to her such dreadful professional passage as, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth."

In fact, the clergy, when off duty, are no safer guides of attractive young women than other mortal men; and Lillie had so often seen their spiritual attentions degenerate into downright, temporal love-making, that she held them in as small reverence as the rest of their sex. Only one dreadful John the Baptist of her acquaintance, one of the camel's-hair girdle and locust-and-wild-honey species, once encountering Lillie at Saratoga, and observing the ways and manners of the court which she kept there, took it upon him to give her a spiritual admonition.

"Miss Lillie," he said, "I see no chance for the salvation of your soul, unless it should please God to send the small-pox upon you. I think I shall pray for that."

"Oh, horrors, don't! I'd rather never be saved," Lillie answered with a fervent sincerity.

The story was repeated afterwards as an amusing bon mot, and a specimen of the barbarity to which religious fanaticism may lead; and yet we question whether John the Baptist had not the right of it.

For it must at once appear that, had the small-pox made the above mentioned change in Lillie's complexion at sixteen, the entire course of her life would have taken another turn. The whole world then would have united in letting her know that she must live to some useful purpose, or be nobody and nothing. Schoolmasters would have scolded her if she idled over her lessons; and her breaking down in arithmetic, mistakes in history, would no longer have been regarded as interesting. Clergymen, consaulted on her spiritual state, would have told her freely that she was a miserable sinner, who, except she repented, must likewise perish. In short, all those bitter and wholesome truths, which strengthen and invigorate the virtues of plain people, might possibly have led her a long way on towards saintship.

As it was, little Lillie was confessedly no Saint; and yet, if much of a sinner, society has much to answer for as she. She was the daughter and flower of the Christian civilization of the the nineteenth century, and the kind of women that, on the whole, men of quiet distinguishes sense have been fond of choosing for wives, and will go on seeking to the end of the chapter.

Did she love John? Well, she was quite pleased to be loved by him, and she liked the prospect of being his wife. She was sure he would always let her have her own way, and that he had plenty of worldly means to do it with.

Lillie, if not very clever in a literary and scientific point of view, was no fool. She had, in fact, under all her softness of manner, a great deal of that real hard grit which shrewd, worldly people call common sense. She saw through all the illusions of fancy and feeling, right to the tough material core of things. However soft and tender and sentimental her habits of speech and action were in her professional character as a charming woman, still the fair Lillie had she been a man, would have been respected in the business world, as one that had cast her eye-teeth, and knew on which side her bread was buttered.

A husband, she knew very well, was the man undertook to be responsible for his wife's bills: he was the giver, bringer, and maintainer of all sorts of solid and appreciable comforts.

Lillie's bills had hitherto been sore places in the domestic history of her family. The career of a fashionable belle is not to be supported without something of an outlay; and that innocence of arithmetical combinations, over which she was wont to laugh bewitching among her adorers, sometimes led to results quite astounding to the prosaic, hard-working papa, who stood financially responsible for all her finery.

The season for coughs and colds is rapidly approaching, and every one should be prepared to check the first symptoms, as a cough contracted between now and Christmas frequently lasts all winter. There is no better remedy than "Johnson's Anodyne Liniment." For all diseases of the throat and lungs, it should be used internally and externally.

Lung fever, common cold, catarrhal fever, and nasal discharge of a brownish color in horses, may be checked at once by liberal use of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders.

Thousands of people are now carlessly allowing themselves to drift through the preliminary symptoms of consumption, under the fatal delusion that they are troubled with nothing but a "slight cold." How necessary is it, then, that a cold should be cared for from its incipiency, and every exertion used to get rid of it. "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers" will stop the hacking cough in a few minutes, and by their influence on the bronchial and pulmonary organs all fears of dangerous results will soon be dissipated—but they must be taken in time. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per box.

THE ERIE CANAL.—This canal is 360 miles in length, and tolls collected upon it for 1861 amounted to over three million dollars, which is nearly double the amount collected in any previous year; and while our neighbors have so much reason to be pleased at this result it is gratifying to know that the sales of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," for the cure of coughs, colds, sprains, bruises, pneumonia, frost-bites, chilblains &c., is increasing much faster. Sold by all medicine dealers at 25 cts. per bottle.

A True Incident.

BY P. B. ROSTWICK.

One afternoon in the month of June, 1870, a lady dressed in deep mourning, and followed by a small child entered one of the fashionable saloons, in the city of N——. The writer happened to be present at the time, and impelled by curiosity followed her in to see what would ensue. Stepping up to the bar and addressing the proprietor who happened to be present, she said:

"Sir can you assist me? I have no friends and am unable to work." He glanced at her and then at the child, with a mingled look of curiosity and pity. Evidently he was somewhat surprised to see a woman in such a place to-day, but without asking any questions gave her some change, then turning to those present said:

"Gentleman here is a lady in distress can't some of you assist her a little." They all cheerfully acceded to this request, and soon a purse of two dollars was raised and placed in her hand.

"Madam," said the gentleman who gave her the money, "why do you come into saloons? It isn't a very proper place for a lady; and why are you driven to such a step?"

Turning her mournful, yet expressive eyes upon the speaker with an expression I shall never forget, she replied;

"Sir I know it isn't a proper place for a lady to be in, and you ask why I am driven to this step.

I will tell you in one short word," pointing to a bottle behind the bar labled "whiskey," "that is what has driven me to this —WHISKEY. I was once happy and surrounded by all the luxuries that wealth, could procure, with a fond and indulgent husband. But in an evil hour he was tempted, and not possessing the will to resist that temptation, fell, and in one short year my dream of happiness was over, my happy home forever desolated and desolated, and kind husband and the wealth some called mine, lost lost, never to return, and by the accursed wine cup. You see he are only a wreck of my former self, homeless and friendless with nothing left me in this world but this little child," and weeping bitterly, she affectionately caressed the golden curls that shaded a face of exquisit lovliness. Regaining here composure, and turning to the proprietor of the saloon sheecontinued.

"Sir, the reason I occasionally enter a place like this is to implore those who deal in the deadly poison to desist—to stop a business that spreads desolation, ruin, poverty and starvation. Think one moment of your own loved ones, and then imagine them in the situation I am in. I appeal to your better nature, I appeal to your heart, for I know you possess a kind one, to retire from business so ruinous to your patrons. Did you know that the money you receive in exchange for the vile stuff you sell across this bar, is the same as taking the bread from the mouths of the famishing wives and children of your customers? That is strips the clothes from their backs, deprives them of all the comforts of life, throws unhappiness, misery, crime, and desolation into their once happy homes? Oh, Sir, I implore beseech and pray you to retire from a business you blush to own you are engaged in before your fellowmen, and enter a business that will not only be profitable to yourself but your fellow creatures also— Please excuse me, if I have spoken too plainly, but I could not help it when I think of the mystery and unhappiness it has caused me."

"Madam, I'm not offended," he answered, in a voice tremendous with emotion, "but thank you with my heart for what you have said.

"Mamma," said the child, taking her mother's hand "here is a gentleman who wants me to sing "Little Bessie" for him. Shall I do it.

"Yes, darling, as they wish you to?"

They all joined in the request, and placing her in a chair she sang in a sweet childish voice the following beautiful song:

Out in the gloomy night sadly I roam,
I have no mother dear, no pleasent home.
Nobody cares for me, no one would cry,
Even if poor little Bessie were to die.

Weary and tired I've been wandeaing all day,
Asking for work, but I'm too small they say,
On the damp ground I must now lay my head,
Father's a drunkard and mother is dead.

We were so happy till father drank rum.
Then all our sorrow and trouble began:
Mother grew pale and wept every day,
Baby and I were too hungry to play,
Slowly they faded till one summer night.
I found their dead faces all silent and white.
Then with big tears slowly dropping I said—
Father's a drunkard, and mother is dead.

Oh, if the temperance then only would find
Poor wrecked father and talk very kind,
If they could stop him from drinking, why then,
I should be so very, very happy again.
Is it too late, men of temperance please try,
Or poor little Bessie must soon starve and die;
All the day long I've been begging for bread,
Father's a drunkard, and mother is dead.

That scene I shall never forget to my dying day, and the sweet cadence of her musical voice still rings in my ears, and every word of the song, as it drops from her lips sunk deep into the hearts of those gathered around her. With her golden curls falling carelessly around her little shoulders, her face of almost ethereal beauty, and looking so trustingly and confidently upon the men around, her beautiful blue eyes lighted up with a light that seemed not of this earth, formed a picture worthy of the pen of a poet or painter; a living statue of purity and innocence. The unfinished game of billiards were left, the cards thrown aside, the unemptied glass remained upon the counter, and all passed her, some with curiosity, some with sadness, and some with pity beaming from their eyes, entwined with the musical voice and beauty of a child who seemed better fit to be with the angels above then in such a place.

At the close of the song many were weeping—men who had not shed a tear for years now wept like a child. One young man who had resisted with scorn the pleadings of a loving mother and dear friends to lead better life, to desist from a course that was wasting his fortune, and ruining his health, approaching the child, and taking her hand while tears streaming down the pale cheek, exclaimed with deep emotion:

"God bless you my little angel, you have saved me from ruin and disgrace—from poverty and a drunkard's grave. If there were ever an angel upon earth you are one, God bless you, God bless you," and placing a bill in the hand of the mother, said, please accept this trifle as a token of my regard and esteem, for your little girl has done me a kindness no wealth can ever repay. And remember, whenever you are in want you will ever find in me a true friend," at the same time giving her his name and address. Taking her child by the hand, she turne to go, but paused at the door and:

"God bless you, gentleman, and please accept the heartfelt thanks of a poor and friendless woman for the kindness and courtesy you have shown her," and before anyone could reply she was gone.

A silence of several moments ensued which was at last broken by the proprietor exclaiming:

"Gentlemen, that lady is right, and I have sold my last glass of whiskey, and if any of you want any more you will have to go elsewhere,"

"And I have drank my last glass of whisky," said a young man who had long been given up as utterly beyond the reach of those who had a deep interest in his welfare —that he had sank to low to ever reform.

"There is a temperance organization in this city called Temple of Honor, and at their next meeting I shall send up my name to be admitted. Who will go with me?

"I!" "I!" "I!" and "I" several exclaimed in a chorus, and fifteen names were added to his.

True to his word, the owner of the saloon where this strange scene was enacted, disposed of his entire stock the next day, and is now engaged in honorable business.

Would to heaven that lady could have gone into every saloon in every hamlet, and town, and city throughout the country and met with the the same cheering results.

Yes, if the mothers and wives, and sisters of the drunkard that can tell what whiskey has done and is doing. You need not follow him to the companions and brilliant palaces erected by King Alcind and its confederates to lure him from the path of virtue and usefulness, to that of ruin and disgrace. You need not follow him to the lowest den of crime and impurity; as he daily reels home or lies in the gutter in a condition worse than the brutes of the field. No! but follow him to the place he calls home, and the hollow cheek, the dimmed eye, the tear that rolls down the patient, care-worn face of the forsaken wife, and the cries of the starving children, tell their own story in a language in a language unexpressible in words.

You see a young couple start out upon life joyous and happy, with no cloud to darken the bright sky of their happiness. The husband is true and generous and kind. The wife loving and devoted to him she has chosen as a protector through life. In a word, their home is all that contentment, love and happiness can make it. But in a few brief months there is a sad, sad change. The cheeks of her you knew in youth have lost their bloom, those bright eyes their brilliancy. You no longer hear the cheerful and happy laugh, and her voice strikes your ear with a mournful cadence, so unlike the merry tones of former times. You anxiously inquire what is the trouble. She tells you she has been ill, but is better now. Not even to her nearest friend will she reveal the awful, life-darkening secret, that her husband is a drunkard.

A few months after, as you sit in your cheerful room, you are a little shocked, perhaps, by the intelligence of her death. You have been told her health for some time past has been declining, and the world and her friends assign the cause to some incurable or fatal disease, that has been gradually, but surely growing upon her. It was a fatal disease, but not of the flesh.

The man who had pledged at the altar and before his God eternal fidelity—who had solemnly vowed to ever love, cherish and protect the trusting being at his side, who placed her life in his keeping, in an hour of temptation forgets that obligation in the exhilerating influence of the wine cup; his loving wife, his dear children, his happy home, all—all must be sacrificed to gratify his love and passion for the intoxicating cup.

The wife that first welcomed him home with joy and pleasure, now hails his advent with fear and trembling. The terrible thought that him whom she honored and almost worshipped; him whom she loved to think of as the noblest and best of men, to have fallen so low, so debased, so degraded, is ever preying at her heart. Her noble husband is a drunkard, and she a drunkard's wife. Even her children are taunting by told by their schoolmates, they are nobody—their father is a drunkard. None feel the disgrace more keenly than that forsaken but devoted wife. Day by day she droops and fades until at last death comes to her relief, and she is borne broken-hearted to an early grave.

Thus has that husband, by his own folly, and the disputed life he has led, murdered his young wife and we assert, that in the light of heaven, he is as guilty of the crime of murder as the man who deliberately kills his victim with the knife or pistol. Well may the children of such a parent exclaim with the author of that beautiful and touching poem, "The Drunkard's Daughter:"

"Go feel what I have felt,
Go bear what I have borne—
Sink 'neath the blow a father dealt,
And the cold, proud world's scorn.
Thus struggle on from year to year,
Thy sole relief the scalding tear.
Go kneel as I have knelt,
Implore, beseech and pray,
Strive the besotted heart to melt
The downward course to stay—
Be cast with bitter curse aside,
Thy prayers burlesqued, thy tears defied.
Tell me I hate the bowl!
Hate is a feeble word—
I loathe abhor—my very soul
With strong disgust is stirred
Whene'er I see, or hear, or tell
Of the dark beverage of hell."

Dear reader we will leave you to answer within your own heart the question, is the drunkard a murderer?

Beautiful it is to understand and know that a thought did never yet die; that as thou, the originator thereof, hast gathered it and created it from the whole past, so thou wilt transmit it to the whole future. It is thus that the heroic heart, the seeing eye of the first times, still feeds and sees in us of the latest: that the wise man stands ever encompassed and spiritually embraced by a cloud of witnesses and brothers; and there is a living literal communion of saints, wide as the world itself, and as all the history of the world. Carlyle.

To show us the worth of time, God, most liberal of all other things, is exceedingly frugal in dispensing of that, for he never gives us two minutes together nor grants us a second till he has with Him in the first, still keeping the third in His own hands, so that we are in perfect uncertainty whether we shall have it or not. The true manner of preparing for the last moment is to spend all others well, and ever to expect that. We date upon the world, as if it were never to have an end, and we neglect the next, as if it were never to have a beginning. Fenelon.

FURS---ATTENTION.

The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in furs against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.

Montreal and Toronto shows a good sample of dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.

He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a safe guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.

The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.

I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as strangers, to the inspection of my furs, which are not represented under fictitious names.

PERSONAL:—Two sons of the Rev. J. M. Rogor, of this Town, left here on Thursday last, for Australia. One of them, Robt., had completed his third year at the University, standing very high in classics, almost carrying off the gold medal, but too close study began to show its effects, and hence his trip to Australia. We fondly hope that the change of climate may have the effect of removing any cause of alarm for his health.

The following is the length of the proposed Canada Pacific Railway, by way of the Ottawa Valley. From Montreal to Ottawa, 115 miles; from Ottawa to Mattawan, 193; from Mattawan to Fort Garry, 985; from Fort Garry to Yellow Head Pass, 935; thence to limits of British Columbia, 52; route by the Upper Fraser River (British Columbia,) by "short cut," 445; distance from Ottawa Valley, at Mattawan, 2, 467 miles.

The corner of George and Charlotte Streets is not always as clear as it might be. The passers by have difficulty sometimes to squeeze through whiskey-soaked-good-for-nothing-looking-fellows. If some one would advise them to go to their dens instead of blocking up the side walks it would be a favor.

THE TRUNK MURDER.—The trial of Rosenweig, the author of the Trunk murder in New York has just been completed, and the scoundrel has received a sentence hardly commensurate with the magnitude of his hellish crime—seven years imprisonment in the States Prison, with hard labor and a fine of $500. The Judge in passing sentence said he regretted the penalty was not death.

DR. WILD'S LECTURE.—The lecture of the Rev. Dr. Wild on Tuesday evening, in the Music Hall was a grand success The hall was well filled with a very appreciative audience, and the Dr. handled his subject in a very interesting and pleasing style. He is a very eloquent speaker, ready and easy of delivery, and keeps up the greatest interest during the whole time of speaking. He sometimes startles his audience with the oddity and originality of his ideas and his manner of expressing them, but does it so agreably, that the newest theories advanced are calculated to lead the mind to reflection and enquiry. His theory of three colors in the human family is, perhaps, possible, and may have some show of truth about it, but will not be readily received; yet it and other new things advanced, have left food for reflection and grounds for investigation that will take up the leisure hours of many of those present for some time. All who missed the lecture missed one of the greatest treats yet offered to a Peterboro audience. We hope the Mechanic's Institute will engage the Dr. for one or two more lectures. His return would secure a crowded house.

It is rumored that Senator Campbell, Postmaster General, is also about to receive an appointment, so that John A's colleagues are beginning to fear facing the people again.

The Committee of the Protestant Home acknowledge with thanks the following donations for October: Miss Hilton, tea; Mr Thomas Porter, potatoes and and apples; Mrs. A. Smith, grapes and chickens for the sick; Mr. Connal, apples and potatoes; Mrs. Cronyn, carrots; Mr. Winch, half quarter of lamb, Mr. Laing, bag of apples a Friend, a bag of apples; Mr. White, quarter of lamb; Mr. Henry Carveth, Grand Jury, $1.00.

White & McCullagh, Boot and Shoemakers, petitioned the Town Council at its last session for a lease of fifty feet of the south-west corner of the Market Square for the purpose of erecting a large building for carrying on extensively the manufacture of boots and shoes. Already, they employ 46 hands, and they intend, if the council grant them a lease of the ground, to increase the number to 60 or 80 hands. At present the ground is unoccupied, and, of course, bringing in nothing, and hence might as well be leased. The only argument against it is that, it divides up the square, making it too small; yet there is considerable space in the east and north never occupied, except by a circus, which is, to say the least, of very little benefit to town or country. The favorable consideration of all matters that concern the increase of trade and manufacture, will always be viewed as to the interest of the town; and, no doubt, the committee to which the petition is referred will give the matter a fair and careful consideration.

POST OFFICE ROBBERY IN THE HALIFAX POST OFFICE.—The guilty party is John C. Campbell, a young man who has been for a long time clerk in the Post Office at Halifax, and though not a general favorite with the public on account of his putting on something of the swell, was considered a reliable and trustworthy man in the position he held. His salary had lately been raised and he would have been eligible for further promotion, but being too anxious to obtain greatness he began to live at a larger expense than was consistent with his means. The frequent disappearance of money letters brought the whole department into disrepute and a kind of stigma attached to the rest of the employees. Suspicion began to attach to Campbell on account of his increasing expenditure, and was aided, doubtless, by the anxiety of all to clear themselves from blame in connection with the disappearance of the money letters sent by the agent of the Bank of Montreal at Meramichi Detectives were employed, who closely watched Campbell, and became assured he was the thief. Finding himself under the surveillance of the police he at length made a clean breast of it, and stated as to the Meramichi money that he had hidden it in his cellar, and yesterday burnt the notes. This seems incredible, and is partly false, for it would seem scarcely possible that the young man should be allowed quietly to embark in the steamer this afternoon and thus slip away from punishment. Yet so it is. Campbell married a young lady of respectable family, and is also a son of the Senator for Guysboro. His property, which is not of great value, has been handed over to the Post Office authorities; but it is not yet known to what extent the sufferers will be reimbursed for their losses. The comment of the vulgar public is the same as in the case of Forman, that it is a neat thing to steal like a gentleman, and to have influential friends to protect one afterwards. The agent of the Montreal Bank at Halifax succeeded in getting Cameron before he left the Country, and now he may receive legal justice, notwithstanding that the post office authorities and the powers at Ottawa were ready to work at the robbery, because the robber was the son of a supporter of John A Campbell & Co.

In another article will be found an account of robberies committed in the Halifax post office by one of the officials. Following the corrupt and corrupting influences of Dr. Tupper, as set forth during the last Session of the Dominion Parliament, and the equally unjust and iniquitous precedent of Col. Grey in his mileage business, Campbell thought he might reasonably take what was not his own. He bought a nice property—lived pretty fast, and made up deficits by opening money letters.

We know that there are some people who think it no harm to steal from the Government, or from a wealthy corporation, and are simple enough to boast of the manner in which it is done; very few, however, but are aware that to take money out of a letter addressed to another person is robery. It is well known that vast sums pass through the post office in a year, and hence a great necessity exists to secure honest employees in that department of the public services. But what security will the public have, when they learn even registering a letter does not secure the parties concerned against loss. It is true that the Government makes a little more revenue, but the public receive no more security against loss than if the letter should not be registered.

This Halifax case, however, will cause a greater degree of uncertainty in the public mind; they learn that a post office employee can continue a system of robbery for years, and when detected, can make his escape, with the whole government influence of the Dominion, aiding and abetting him. Who will, therefore, in the future run the risk of sending money in a registered letter.

This brings to our mind the advice we once received from a Postmaster, and we freely give it for what it is worth. It was this: "Never register a letter containing money, for in so doing you are only giving two cents to put on a mark that enables the dishonest clerk the more easily to know in which letter the money is."

There was some philosophy in those remarks, and looking at the matter in the light of the Halifax robberies it appears too true. But when the government of the day, those highest in authority, have such low ideas of honesty and public morality, what may we expect from those under them whom they too often employ to do their dirty work, and the doing of which seems to be the only password, at Ottawa, to offices in the Dominion. The more dirty work a man or his friends do for those in authority the more likely is he to be hoisted into some office.

A LESSON.—It is the duty, though some times not a pleasant one, to record events that transpire, for our information and instruction. The death of Mr. Daniel McDonald, son of Dr McDonald, Esq., of Cobourg, is one of these events. He was, not many years past, a young man of promise, and was esteemed by all his acquaintances. On Friday last, at the age of thirty-three, a young man, after a few days illness, he died. He was well known for his great muscular development—for his strength. It has been said that he could easily lift 1,400 or 1,500 lbs, and on one occasion he lifted even more. In a late trial of strength he so far injured himself, as to sow the seeds of death. He burst his legs, and otherwise injured himself, that for some months before his death he was like other men, and felt that he was suffering the reward of folly, in over taxing the muscles which God had given for wise purposes.

We need not follow him through his suffering and pain of body and mind It is enough to know that during the last few days of his life he expressed himself as having received, through lifting, the injuries of which he complained, in the beginning of the week. He burst a blood vessel, we understand, which was followed with a great loss of blood. Doctors were called, they expressed but little hope of his recovery. He died on Friday, at the age above written, leaving four children, now without father or mother, as their mother died a few years ago. Our sympath ies are with the children and his parents, and other relatives.

We cannot, however, drop this notice without warning strong men to beware. There is a limit to strength, as to everything human, and all may rest assured that every violated law receives its reward; even though that reward be an early grave.

The East Riding Ploughing Match.

Through the kindness of P. Pearce, Esq., we have received the prize list of the East Riding ploughing match. It was held on the farm of Thos. Blezard, Esq, Otonabee. The day was very favourable, and about three hundred persons were present, evincing the greatest interest in the proceedings.

There were 7 entries in this class.

Mr. Blezard, with his usual hospitality, entertained about 60 to a splendid dinner. The match went off most agreeably.

The Grand Junction.

It is difficult to say with any degree of certainty, whether the Grand Junction shall or shall not be built. A company has been organized and directors elected. The survey we are told, is being proceeded with, and the work is said to be in the hands of Mr. Shanly, but still Mr. Shanly is only employed by the Directors, and they will have to pay him no doubt. He is not a contractor yet. The Belleville people are very slow in their movements, and perhaps a few have axes to grind, which too often acts to the detriment of any enterprise, rather than to its success. If the past be any criterion of the future, delays and hesitancy will likely be the general features of the scheme. The people of Peterboro have been favorably disposed toward the Belleville road, but they have learned to look with distrust on its promoters.

THAT OLD BY-LAW.

Lately it has been rumored that the directors intended not only holding the County of Peterboro liable for $75,000 referred to in the late by-law of the County Council, but also for a portion of £100,000 sterling stock talked of being subscribed by the united Counties of Peterborough and Victoria.

The $75,000 By law is not yet settled. The Warden and some others believing it to be illegal, and intend getting entirly relieved from it. This, of course has yet to be decided in the Local Legislature. But in the matter of the old By-law to take £125,500 stock, there need be no uneasiness. P. Pearce, Esq., called our attention to the minutes of council of 1854, and there on the 36th page we find By-law 72 repealing the By law referred to, namely 62, so that really no matter how much inclined the Warden might be to take stock in that road, he has no power whatever to do so. Besides there is no such person as the Warden of the united Counties of Peterboro and Victoria. He is long since legally dead—but even though living, no man can be compelled to take stock unless willing, so that there need be no fears in the matter.

There is no Warden of the united Counties to take stock in the road. The present Wardens are not all likely to do so, and the By-law authorizing the then Warden to take stock was repealed in 1854-17 years ago all sufficient reasons to render our minds easy on this matter.

The Cobourg and Peterboro Railway.

Our readers are already aware that Mr. Fowler is at work on the Peterboro and Haliburton railway between the town and Chemong Lake. He has subscribed the necessary amount of stock—$130,000, and paid in the first 10 per cent, and is at work. At present the road appears to start from the old Cobourg or Chemong road, and of course, is therefore in connexion with the Cobourg road. The Cobourg and Marmora Mining Company has got Rice Lake surveyed by Mr. Shanly, and he declares that there is nothing impracticable in making a solid track across the lake. Already, Mr. Dumble, C. E., has made estimates, we believe, and puts the cost of bridging the lake, solid, at $30,000. Mr. Shanley's engineer, reports very nearly the same amount, we understand. The road is graded to Peterborough, and the Marmora Company are bound to replace the iron rails. Repairs and ties are the only items of cost in re-opening this road, therefore. Cobourg has some $50,000 in cash, which she intends applying to open the railroad to this town, and it is said that she has other $30,000, which will be given towards extension from Peterborough northwards.

The company is able to put money in the road too, so that, to all appearance, the Cobourg road is about certain to be re-opened.

The feeling of the town is in favour of aiding extension northward and westward Already, $40,000 has been voted to the Haliburton road, to the lake, and more may be given to secure extension to some desirable place. But it is as much the interest of Peterboro to secure communication with the front as extension northward, so that what is given should be in connection with some sure scheme to the front, as well as some desirable place north and west. There can be no greater mistake than to sit still indifferently viewing rival railway promoters, contending for their schemes, while our interests are only secondary considerations with them. Nor should we, by indifference, throw obstacles in the way of the early construction of the first possible road to the front, with extensions to Fenelon Falls, and Haliburton, as soon as can be.

The delay of a few months may proove fatal to the interests of this town. as either the Nippissing or Midland may extend to Fenelon falls, and cut off all chances of a road here. Let us, therefore, encourage the first company that will secure us a road to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon with a view to extension to Haliburton; and let us see that such company is able to secure to us communication with the front, also.

The Cheese Business of This County.

For many years some of our best farmers have felt that the old system of grain raising must, ere long, impoverish their farms, as it was a continual taking out of the soil without a possibility of replenishing it by manure, except to a very limited degree. They were finding to their sorrow that their farms were fast becoming impoverished.

But a few years ago Mr. John Walton introduced the making of cheese into Smith, perhaps more as an experiment than with the hope of making a business of it, as all changes are entered on with considerable caution and misgivings. Mr. Walton however succeeded, and soon others were found engaged in the same business. We have now in the Township of Smith about five factories, viz:—Mr. Walton, Mr. Mann, Mr. Elliott, Mr. Davis, and Mr. Manning. In N. Monaghan, Mr. Williamson has started a factory, and there is one in Otonabee.

Mr. Jas Elliott	80,000 lbs
Mr. Walton	22,000 "
Mr. Jas Mann	10,000 "
Mr. Lewis Davis	9 000 "
Mr. Williamson	20,000 "
Otonabee Union Factory	30,000 "
Mr. Manning, say	10 000 "

We have not succeded in getting the amount made by Mr. Manning, but it is, in all probability about the same as Mr. Mann, or Mr. Davis.

The total cheese made in this county is not less, therefore, than 181,500 lbs, as all the parties have under-estimated rather than over, we believe. That is over 90 tons of cheese are now made in this county, while three or four years ago there was not enough made for home use.

In the above calculations we have not enumerated anything but factory-made cheese; although Mr. I Garbutt and others, made a considerable quantity. Price have been about 9c to 9½c for large lots, and 10c for small lots We may safely put the whole at 9½c The cheese business therefore, of these 7 factories foots up the nice little sum of $17,242. Mr. Elliott doing nearly the half of the whole, or about $8,000 worth. It is also worthy of remark that five of the factories are in Smith alone.

Should Otonabee, Dummer and Asphodel, all splendid townships for dairy purposes, see fit to act as Mr. Elliott, the County of Peterboro would be one of the greatest centres of cheese-making in America, and the amount might reach 100 000 lbs., worth about $100,000 and this without lessening the quantity of wheat or other grains, as the average bushels per acre would very soon be much larger than at present. We venture to say that for years it has not exceeded 15 bushels to the acre, whereas it might as well be 25 bushels with the soil in a proper state of culture.

We have thrown these few figures together to show what was been done, and from this we can learn what might be done if we had such men as Mr. Elliott scattered through the country.

It is only fair, however, to say that to Mr. John Walton is due the introduction into the County of the factory system of making cheese. No man in the County has done so much to improve the stock of the County, as has Mr. Walton, and most assuredly to him also is due the credit of introducing cheese factories Mr. Elliott has, it is true, outstripped him, and others may outstrip Mr Elliott; but all were afraid to make a beginning till Mr. Walton did it.

By these remarks we do not insinuate that other men have done nothing much to improve stock, and encourage a better system of farm and dairy work, but the men who are bold enough to take the lead in unknown, or untried enterprises, deserve more credit than those who follow after.

We hope farmers, everywhere, will take a lesson from the present cheese makers, and try their luck. Where is the Asphodel Factory once spoken of?

BUTTER.

The cry was, during the summer, "we will have no butter this year," an unfavourable season, and the quantity of cheese being made will leave us without butter. It is very pleasing to find that the prophesy has not been fulfilled. We believe, and are safe in saying, that there has been more butter sold in this market this fall than in any year heretofore. Now if this is the case, while 181,500 lbs of cheese have been made, also, we need not fear that the supply of butter will fall short.

The Buffalo Courier of the 30th says that John McDonald, captain of the large barge Hotchkiss, at Collingwood, Ont., disappeared from his vessel, then lying at the elevator, nearly opposite the foot of street. Friday night, leaving evidence which conclusively indicate that he put an end to his existence.

The Fenian Raid into Manitoba has come to an end. O'Neil and O'Donohoe, who were taken prisoners, have been released by the United States authorities, at Pembina, and they have escaped southward. Governor Archibald has rendered himself obnoxious to the loyal part of the Province, and has lost their respect and confidence.

What the Manitoba Liberal thinks of Governor Archibald, John a Macdonald's Lieutenant Governor in the West.

"We briefly referred in our last to the the fact that on Sunday afternoon, the 8th inst., the Lieutenant-Governor was sent for by Louis Reil, who with about 100 of the gang who aided him in his villanies of '69 and 70 took up a position on the east side of the Red River, opposite Fort Garry. The summons was duly and expeditiously answered by His Honor's appearance among, and in the blaze of day, and within gunshot of the spot where Thomas Scott was murdered, the Queen's representative shook hands with the murderer. It will be seen from other columns that Riel, on hearing of O'Donoghue's failure at Pembina decided instead of going to goin that worthy as was his original intention, on offering his services to Mr. Archibald. The acceptance of his services was in entire accordance with the Lieutenant-Governor's policy, but no one supposed that he would have the hardihood to carry it to such an extreme. Such, however, to his lasting disgrace as a Briton, was the case. This man and his followers were the same who fled at the approach of the troops last year, and whom the gallant Wolesley characterized as banditti. We cannot find language to express the deep humiliation created in the minds of the people who witnessed or heard of this climax of insult to loyal men in the Province. We trust that the attention of the Governor-General will be drawn to this, the last and greatest atrocity committed by his Lieutenant in this part of the Dominion. The feeling of disgust and contempt which his conduct has created will render it utterly impossible for Mr. Archibald to conduct the government of the country either with pleasure to himself or with the faintest chance of satisfaction to the people; and we trust the Governor General will have sufficient influence with Cartier to get him to replace our Lieutenant-Governor with some one who, if of equal incapacity with him, will at least refrain from offering such gross insults to our people."—Manitoba Liberal.

It is confidently believed that Riel intended joining the raiders, as the following affidavit of a loyal Half breed shows:—

AFFIDAVIT.

I, Francois Charette, of the parish of St. Norbert, make oath and say, that at the church of Pere Richot, on Sunday, the 8th day of October, 1871, I was present, and in the morning, before service commenced, I heard Louis Riel say to a number of French Half breeds who were assembled outside the church. "You see," said he, "that our friend O'Donoghue is taken prisoner at Pembina. He has always been our friend, and we should fight for him and try and get him released."

Pere DeLorme said, "Our O'Donoghue is a prisoner, and we can do nothing, as the English are stronger than we. But the best thing we can do is to go and see the Governor and to offer him our services, to show that as we can do nothing for O'Donoghue we are all on his side now."

To this Reil agreed, and they all went away to see the Governor.

From what I have heard Riel and others say I know that it was the intention of him and his party to join O'Donoghue and the Fenians. FRANCOIS CHARETTE.

Sworn before me at Winnipeg, this 12th day of October, 1871, and interpreted and thoroughly understood by the above Francois Charrestte.

Town Council.

COUNCIL CHAMBER,
October 23, 1871.

The Council met. Present: Councillors English, O'Bierne, Doherty, Toole, Morrow, Elmison, Rutherford and Smith.

In the absence of the Mayor, Mr. English was called to the chair.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

PETITIONS.

Were received—from White & McCullagh, asking for a lease for a period of twenty-one years, of the south west corner of the Market Block, at a reasonable rent, and exemption from taxation, upon the condition of their going largely into the manufacture of boots and shoes; from John Sullivan, praying for relization of taxes, in consequence of the loss sustained by him by fire—referred to the Court of Revision; from W. Patterson and others, asking a new railing on the bridge on Hunter Street.

ACCOUNTS.

From John Doherty, for carts and ladders for Hook and Ladder Company, amounting to $295; from Railroad Committee, for the excursion to Fenelon Falls, $242.25—both of these were referred to the Finance Committee; from S. J. Carver, for postage, $1.23; from Jas. Navin, for work on Reid Street last year, 9.39; from T. Collins, for pails,—all of which were ordered to be paid.

FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. O'Bierne presented a report of the Finance Committee, recomending the payment of sundry accounts, amounting to $74.55 for the Fire Department; for insperation, $3.50, and to Blake, Korr and Bethune, $50.

Mr. Toole moved, seconded by Mr. Rutherford,—That the application of W. Patterson and others be refered to the Street and Bridge Committee, with power to dispose of the same as they may deem expedient, and that the resolution moved by Mr. Smith, on the 10th of April last, in reference to receiving applications after a certain date, be rescinded.

It was put to the vote, with the following result; Yeas—Messrs. Toole, Edmison, Rutherford, Doherty, Morrow and O'Bierne—4. Nay—Mr. Smith.

The Chairman said as it required a majority of the whole Council to carry it, he should declare it lost.

SUNDRY RESOLUTIONS.

Moved by Mr. Morrow, seconded by Mr. Smith,—That the petition of Messrs. White & McCullagh be refered to a committee composed of the following gentlemen, namely—Messrs. Stevenson, Toole, Smith; Lundy and the Mayor, and that they report at the next meeting of the Council,—Carried.

On motion of Mr. Rutherford, an account of Mr. E. C. Hill was refered to the Street and Bridge Committee.

On motion of Mr. Smith, Mr. Hopkins was appointed a member of the following committees, in the place of Mr. Donnistoun, resigned, viz.: Finance, Fire and Court of Revision.

GAS.

Mr. Toole as chairman of the Gas Committee, read and submitted a report recommending the erection of a gas lamp at the corner of Charlotte and Bethune streets, and two on McDonald street, one being at the corner of Bethune street, and the other at the corner of Reid street.

Mr. Smith that lamps were equally required on Simcoe and Hunter streets at Bethune streets. with that at Charlotte street, and he thought they should be added.

Mr. Elmison then moved, seconded by Mr. Toole,—That in addition to the lamps recommended in the Report of the Gas Committee, that the Gas Company be requested to place a street lamp on the south side of Brock street where it intersects Bethune street; and that the said Report of the Gas Committee with this resolution added thereto be adopted.—Carried.

Mr. Toole moved, seconded by Mr. Morrow,—That the Street Inspector be directed as an experiment to have the gravel sidewalk on the north side of Murray street, between Water and George streets, covered with some suitable cement.

The question being raised whether this was dew work or not by Mr. Elmison, after some discussion, the chairman ruled that it was not, and hence that it would only require a majority of those present to carry it. Whereupon, Mr. O'Doherty having already retired, Mr. Rutherford left his seat, and left the Council without a quorum.

Consequently the Council stands adjourned until next Monday night.

An assembly of cardinals at Rome, have advised Pio. Nono to leave the city on the day Victor Emmanuel convenes his first Parliament, which is very soon to meet. The Holy Father will scarcely take their advice.

A CIVIL suit has been pending against Saint Brigham, for the recovery of some money improperly retained from a widow, has resulted unfavorably for the illustrious defendant. He will therefore have to disgorge.

A SUDDEN CALL.—The Leader says, At a late hour on Sunday night a middle aged man, whose name is unknown, knocked at the door of Michael Bolman a house, No. 40 Stanley street, and made an earnest appeal for a night's lodging, which was granted him. On going to call him yesterday morning he was found to be quite dead. He is supposed to have died from dropsy. His was given over to Mr. William Kendrew, Inspector of Anatomy.

EXTENSIVE AND DARING ROBERY.—The Warder, Lindsay, says: We learn that on Monday evening last while Mr. Cameron, store keeper, Oakwood, was at tea, a man entered the shop, disguised with a false face, and presenting a revolver at the clerk took possession of the cash box, which contained some $1500 in cash, and a large amount in mortgages. $1,000 of the money were the funds of Manipaa, Mr. Cameron being the Treasurer. After getting possession of the cash box, the robber succeeded in getting off before an alarm could be given, and no trace has been discovered of him.

DEATH BY LIGHTNING.—On Thursday last, while a number of farmers were attending a sale of farm stock on the 9th con. of Mariposa, a severe storm came which caused a stampede for the barn, some four or five however, remained talking, when a flash of lighting struck one of their number, causing instantaneous death, and completely stunning the others, some of whom, we understand were knocked down. The deceased, Thomas Tremeer, lived on the 5th con. of Mariposa, and we learn was an industrious man. He leaves a wife and family. The fatal stroke left no marks save that the hat was a little torn and the temple and cheek slightly discolored.—Lindsay Warder

EDUCATION IN JAPAN.—The Japanese Minister at Washington recently visited Amherst, an I spent several days in acquainting himself with the methods of education He proposes, it is said, to introduce into his country the Common School system, under competent native and foreign instructors; and, to facilitate this, has suggested that our alphabet be substitute for the Japanese. Even already education has made considerable progress in Yeddo, the capital. There are a university, a medical college, a naval academy and private schools under native teachers. The pupils are estimated as numbering over 3,000; and there are 150 of their young men studdying in American colleges.

MURCHISON—LIVINGSTONE.—The New York World thinks the death of Sir Roderick Murchison an event of much more importance than people generally suppose—seeing that it was he that always gave us periodical assurance that Dr. Livingston, the African explorer, was not dead. It says: "Sir Roderick had an absorbing faith in the toughness of Dr. Livingston, and always expressed a confidence in his continued existence and kept the question whether he was alive or dead open to discussion. In this way the eminent traveller was profusely advertised and the pious purpose of his friends fulfilled. Now that Sir Roderick is dead, any further attempts to slaughter Dr. Living-tone will be useless. The public would quietly accept the rumor of an gruisition or incrimination as true, and would straightway proceed to forget all about him. We may therefore expect to hear nothing but the most favourable tidings from the African explorer until such time as he may return to England, ready to launch a new volume of travels."

An exchange says.—Of 24,000 shoemakers before the siege of Paris, there remained on the 6th of October but 13,000; of the number missing 7,500 were Germans.—The number tailors had been reduced from 30,000 to 25,000. The only branches of industry which have suffered nothing by loss of labourers have been flower-making and dress-making. The shoemakers and tailors who emigrated from Paris to London or Brussels during the war were received by associations in the same manner as the expelled Protestants at the time of the "Edict of Nates" were received in England, Germany and Holland. Of the cabinet-maker of Paris about 9,000 have disappeared, yet furniture wood carvers are now without employment. Many marble-cutters have emigrated to Belgium. The manufacture of bronze statuettes is not represented in the city, and instrument-makers have nothing to do. Sewing machine girls and steam-stresses are not to be found. Of 5,000 printers, about 500 are employed in the newspaper offices; 2,500 are employed on "job work," and 500 are in search of work. The book trade has almost ceased to exist.

A SET OFF TO THE "ALABAMA" CLAIMS.—The investigation by the United States Court of Claims into the various claims against the United States for cotton seized by Government office a during the Rebellion, brings out some remarkable developments, which tend to throw additional light on the mystery which has surrounded the sale of cotton by the Government agents shortly after it was seized from the Rebels during the war. The Government realized from the sale about $30,000,000, and the examinations of the Government agents' books and other evidence, which has been obtained through the prosecution of these claims, reveals the fact that the cotton was worth over twice that amount. It appears that some of the agents at New York disposed of the cotton at 99 cents a pound, when its market value at the time of the sales was 79 cents per pound. Some of the agents appear to have been in collusion with the purchasers, and the poorest kinds of cotton were shown as samples of the entire lot held by the Government, the bidders getting it by this arrangement at the low figure of 79 cents per pound, and subsequently securing a handsome profit. The claimants, however, refuse to base their claims at a figure less than its market value at the time of the sale, and it is feared that the

THE ROBBERY AT THE GRAND TRUNK DEPOT.—The investigation into the somewhat extensive robbery of baggage at the Bonaventure Depot is still going on. One of the trunks, it has been found, belongs to Mr. Bail, of the branch of the Eastern Townships Bank Stanstead. Another belongs to Dupras & Benedict's minstrel troupe and a third to Mr Burt of Toronto. With reference to the trunk of Mr. Burt, the detectives proceeded to a house in Montcalm street, frequented by the prisoner Bloin, where they met a well dressed rowdy whom they questioned. On searching the premises a trunk was found initialed "J B., Toronto," which the young man stated belonged to his brother; and on being asked what he was in Toronto, he could give no satisfactory answer, and was taken into custody. Goods were found in his possession belong to Mr. McLaughlin, and it has since transpired that he is a cousin of the prisoner Bloin, and one of the principal parties concerned in the robbery.—Witness.

A young man in Oakland county, Michigan, loved a girl, but his mother wished him to marry another. The mother held the purse strings, and finally compelled her son to accede to her wishes. The marriage day of the unwilling groom was appointed, the mother dressed her son in his best and repaired to the house of the girl she had chosen. The guests were assembled, but during some delay, the young man Hall slipped out of the house and could not be found. Search was instituted in Detroit, and Hall was found in a desperate condition. He had given away his coat and hat, and his money was all gone and he was singing idiotic songs, and was dancing for the amusement of a loafer crowd. He had not been drinking and had refused liquor, but his brain was turned and he was playing the fool.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL!
Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is Thomas' Eclectric Oil, purely a preparation of six of some of the best Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or prescription of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, nor was ever any before so universally adopted into use, in every country and among all classes, as this mild but efficient purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is a more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cured them: those who have not, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and all know that what it does cure it does always—that it never fails through any fault or neglect of its composition. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of their remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cures are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates, containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continued taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as this excellent remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among nine-tenths of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the dangerous affection of the throat and lungs. As a provision against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and inasmuch as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of them here, or do more than assure the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As the name implies, it does Cure, and does not fail, Quinine, Arsenic, Mercury, Opium, Bismuth, Zinc, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, is in nowise to injure any patient. The number and importance of its cures in the ague districts, are literally beyond account, and we believe without a parallel in the history of Ague medicine. Our pride is gratified by this acknowledgment: we receive of the radical cures effected in obstinate cases, and where other remedies had wholly failed. Disenthralled persons, either resident in, or travelling through miasmatic localities, will be protected by taking the ONE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver into healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many truly remarkable cures, where other medicine had failed.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold by all round the world.

IRON IN THE BLOOD

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protocetal Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an ailment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "without end this," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, inspiring strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

Select Poetry.

Canada.

Oh! fondly I love thee, dear land of my birth;
And proudly I think of thy goodness and worth,
With hope beating high, on thy future I gaze;
The veil that enshrouds thee, I fearlessly raise:
For if faithful and true to thyself, thou art,

Tis true that as yet, thou art tender and young;
But Britain's thy parent, from her thou hast sprung,
The blood of her sons courses free through thy veins,
And Britain's descendants, her prestige maintains;
And now passing onward with giant-like stride,
'Ere long thou mayst sit down by her side.

With withering blight, o'er Canadian sod.
The sceptre of tyranny never was swayed

The exile and fugitive hasten to thee.
For truly thy land is the home of the free
A Providence kind, with beneficent hand,
Hath graciously placed at thy sovereign command,
Unfailing resources of power and wealth;
And hath stamped with the roseate hue of health,
Thy sons and thy daughter's who shrink not from toil,
But win their support from thy gracious soil.

The thousands of Europe shall speedily come.
O'er Atlanta's blue wave, in search of a home.
By power despotic no longer oppressed,
'Neath thy fost'ring care, they will peacefully rest;
And the strength of their youth, and their manhoods prime,
Shall rapidly hasten thy future sublime.

Thy rocks and thy mountains their tribute shall bring,
And low at thy feet, shall exultingly fling
The mineral stores in thy bosom concealed,
Whose richness and vastness are not half revealed;
Thy forests and waters shall gladly unite,
To add to thy wealth, and thus add to thy might.

But remember, thy country, rich blessings as thine.
So freely bestowed by a power Divine,
Involve obligations thou may'st not ignore,
To foster whatever is noble and pure;
To smile on the, to intimidate crime,
To bless all mankind be thy mission sublime.

Pink and White Tyranny.

BY MRS HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

CHAPTER IV.—(Continued.)

Mamma had often been called in to calm the tumult of his feelings on such semi-annual devolopments; and she did it by pointing out to him that this present heavy expense was an investment by which Lillie was, in the end, to make her own fortune and that of her family.

When Lillie completed the marriage-service with a view to going through it with John, there was one clause that stood out in consoling distinctness,—With all my worldly goods I thee endow.

As to the other clause, which contains the dreadful word "OBEY," about which our modern women have such fearful apprehensions, Lillie was ready to swallow without even a grimace.

"Obey John!" Her face wore a pretty air of droll assurance at the thought. It was too funny.

"My dear," said Bell Trevors, who was one of Lillie's incense-burners and a bridesmaid elect, "dare you the least idea how rich he is?"

"He is well enough off to do about anything I want," said Lillie.

"Well, you know he owns the whole village of spindlewood, with those great factories, besides law business," said Belle. "But, then, they live in a dreadfully slow, pokey way down there in Springdale. They haven't the remotest idea how to use money."

"I can show him how to use it, said Lillie.

"He and his sister keep a nice sort of old-fashioned place there, and jog about in an old countrified carriage, picking up poor children and visiting schools. She is a very superior woman, that sister."

"I don't like superior women," said Lillie.

"But you must like her, you know. John is perfectly devoted to her, and I suppose she is to be a fixture in the establishment."

"We shall see about that," said Lillie. "One thing at a time. I don't mean we shall live at Springdale. It's horridly pokey to live in those little country towns. He must have a house in New York."

"And a place at Newport for the summer," said Belle Trevors,

"Yes," said Lillie, "a cottage in Newport does very well in the season; and then a country place well fitted up to invite company to in the other months of summer."

"Delightful," said Belle, "if you can get him to do it."

"See if I don't," said Lillie.

"You dear, funny, creature, you—how you do always ride on the top of the waves!" said Belle.

"It's what I was born for," said Lillie. "By the by, Belle, I got a letter from Harry last night."

"Poor fellow, had he heard"—

"Why, of course not. I didn't want he should, till it's all over. It's best, you know."

"He is such a good fellow, and so devoted—it does seem a pity."

"Devoted! well, I should rather think he was," said Lillie. "I believe he would cut off his right hand for me any day. But I never gave him any encouragement. I've always told him I could be to him only as a sister, you know."

"You ought not to write to him," said Bella.

"What can I do? He is perfectly desperate if I don't, and still persist that he means to marry me some day, in spite of my screams."

"Well, he'll have to stop making love to you after you're married."

"Oh, pshaw! don't believe that old-fashioned talk. Lovers make a variety in life. I don't see why a married woman is to give up all the fun of having admirers. Of course, one isn't going to do anything wrong, you know; but one doesn't want to settle down into Darby and Joan at once. Why, some of the young married women the most stunning belles at Newport last year, got a good deal more attention after they were married than they did before. You see the fellows like it, because they are so sure not to be drawn in."

"I think it's too bad on us girls, though," said Belle. "You ought to leave onour turn."

"Oh! I'll turn over any of them to you, Belle," said Lillie.

"There's Harry, to begin with. What do you say to him?"

"Thank you, I don't think I shall take up with such second-hand articles," said Belle, with some spirit.

But here the enterance of the chamber-maid, with a fresh dress from the dress-maker's, resolved the conversation into a discussion so very minute and technical, that it cannot be recorded in our pages.

CHAPTER V.

WEDDING, AND WEDDING TRIP.

Well, and so they were married, with all the newest modern forms, ceremonies and accessaries.

Every possible thing was done to reflect luster on the occasion. There were eight bridesmaids, and every one of them fair as the morn; and eight groomsmen, with white-satin ribbons and white rosebuds in their button-holes; and there was a bishop, assisted by a priest, to give the solemn benedictions of the church; and there was a marriage-bell of tuberoses and lilies, of enormous size, swinging over the heads of the pair at the altar; and there were voluntaries on the organ, and chantings, and what not, all solemn and impressive as possible. In the midst of all this, the fair Lillie promised, "forsaking all others, to keep only unto him, so long as they both should live,"—"to love, honor and obey, until death did the part."

During the whole agitating scene, Lillie kept up her presence of mind, and was perfectly aware of what she was about; so that a very fresh, original and crisp style of trimming, that had been invented in Paris specially for her wedding toilet, received no detriment from the least unguarded movement. We much regret that it is contrary to our literary principles to write half or one-third in French; because the wedding-dress, by far the most important object on this occasion,—and certainly one that most engrossed the thoughts of the bride,—was one entirely indescribable in English. Just as there is no word in the Hottentot vocabulary for "holiness" or purity," so there are no words in our savage English to describe a lady's dress; and, therefore, our fair friends must be recommended, on thir point, to exercise their imagination in connection with the study of the finest French plates, and they may get some idea of Lillie in her wedding-robe and train.

Then there was the wedding banquet, where everybody ate quantities of the most fashionable, indigestible horrors, with praiseworthy courage and enthusiasm; for what is to become of "pate de fois gras" if we don't eat it? What is to become of us if we do, is entirely a secondary question.

On the whole, there was not one jot nor tittle of the most exorbitant requirement of fashion that was not fulfilled on this occasion. The house was a crush of wilting flowers, and smelt of tuberoses enough to give one a vertigo for a month. A band of music brayed and clashed every minute of the time; and a jam of people, in elegant dresses, shrieked to each other above the din, and several of Lillie's former admirers got tipsy in the supper-room. In short, nothing could be finer; and it was agreed, on all hands that it was "stunning." Accounts of it, and of all the bride's dresses, presents and even wardrobe, went into the daily papers; and thus was the charming Lillie Ellis made into Mrs. John Seymour.

Then followed the approved wedding journey, the programme of which had been drawn up by Lillie herself, with carte blanche from John, and included every place where a bride's new toilets could be seen in the most select fashionable circles. They went to Niagara and Trenton, they went to Newport and Saratoga, to the White Mountains and Montreal; and Mrs. John was a meteor of fashionable wonder and delight at all these places. Her dresses and her diamonds, her hats and her bonnets, were all wonderful to behold. The stir and excitement that she had created as simple Miss Ellis was nothing to the stir and excitement about Mrs. John Seymour. It was the mere grub compared with the full-blown butterfly,—the bud compared with the rose. Wherever she appeared her old admirers flocked in her train. The unmarried girls were so to speak, nowhere. Marriage was a new lease of power and splendor, and she revelled in it like a humming-bird in the sunshine.

And was John equally happy? Well to say the truth, John's head was a little turned by the possession of this curious and manifold creature that fluttered and flapped her wings about the eyes and ears of his understanding, and appeared before him every day in some new device of the toilet, fair and fresh, smiling and bewitching, kissing and coaxing, laughing and crying, and in all ways bewildering him, the once sober-minded John, till he scarce knew whether he stood upon his head or his heels. He knew that this sort of rattling, scatter-brained life must come to and end sometime. He knew there was a sober, serious life-work for him; something that must try his mind and soul and strength, and that would, by and by, leave him neither time nor strength to be the mere wandering attache of a gay-bird, whose string he held in hand, and who now seemed to him hither and thither at her will.

John thought all things at intervals; and then, when he thought of the quiet sober, respectable life at Springdale, of the good old staple families, with their steady ways,—of the girls in his neighbourhood with their reading societies, their sewing-circles for the poor, their book-clubs and art-unions for practice in various accomplishmens,—he thought, with apprehension, that there appeared not a spark of interest in his charmer's mind for anything in this direction. She never had read anything,—knew nothing on all those subjects about which the women and young girls in his circle were interested; while, in Springdale, there were none of the excitements which made her interested in life. He could not help perceiving that Lillie's five hundred particular friends were mostly of the other sex, and wondering whether he alone, when the matter should be reduced to that, could make up to her for all her retinue of slaves.

Like most good boys who grow into good men, John unlimited faith in women. Whatever little defects and flaws they might have, still at heart he supposed they were all of the same substratum as his mother and sister. The moment a woman was married, he imthat all the lovely domestic graces would spring up in her, no matter what may have been her disavantages, merely because she was a woman. He had no doubt of the usual orthodox oak-and-ivy theory in relation to man and woman; and that his wife, when he got one, would be the clinging ivy that would bend her flexible tendrils in the way his strong will and wisdom directed. He had never, perhaps, seen, in southern regions, a fine tree completely smothered and killed in the embraces of a gay, flaunting parasite; and so received no warning from vegetable analogies.

Somehow or other, he was persuaded, he should gradually bring his wife to all his own ways of thinking, and all his schemes and plans and opinions. This might, he thought, be difficult, were she one of the pronounced, strong-minded sort, accustomed to thinking and judging for herself. Such a one, he could easily imagine, there might be a risk of encountering in the close intimacy of domestic life. Even in his dealings with his sister, he was made aware of a force of character and vigor of intellect that sometimes made the carrying of his own way over hers a matter of some difficulty. Were it not that Grace was the best of women, and her ways always the very best of ways, John was not so sure but that she might prove a little too masterful for him.

But this lovely bit of pink and white; this downy, gauzy, airy little elf; this creature, so slim and slender and unsubstantial,—surely he need have no fear that he could not mould and control and manage her! Oh, no! He imagined her melting like a moon-beam, into all manner of sweet compliances, becoming an image and reflection of his own better self; and repeated to himself the lines of Wordsworth,—

"I saw her on a nearer view,
A spirit, yet a woman too,—
Her household motions light and free,
And steps of virgin liberty.
A creature not too bright or good
For human nature's daily food,
For transient pleasure's, simple wiles,
Praise, blame, love, kisses, tears, and smiles."

John fancied he saw his little Lillie subdued into a pattern wife, weaned from fashionable follies, eagerly seeking mental improvement under his guidance, and joining him and Grace in all sorts of edifying works and ways.

The reader may see from the conversations we have detailed, that nothing was farther from Lille's intentions than any such conformity.

The intentions of the married pair, in fact, run exactly contrary to one another. John meant to bring Lillie to a sober, rational, useful family life; and Lillie was pink and white sultana,—his absolute mistress, her word was law, and his will was hers. How the case was ever to be reversed, so as to suit the terms of the marriage service, John did not precisely enquire.

But, when husband and wife start in life with exactly opposing intentions, which, think you, is likely to conquer,—the man or the woman? That is a very nice question and deserves further consideration.

FEEDING POTATOES TO HORSES.—In Germany, where potatoes are so much cheaper than grain, the experiment has been repeatedly tried of feeding horses upon them, at least in part, and this, as we understand, has provided successful. In one instance five four-horse teams were kept hard at work and in good condition on a daily ration, for the twenty horses, of 1 1-2 cwts. of hay, 8 bushels of potatoes, 50 pounds of meal, and a liberal allowance of chopped straw. The potatoes were steamed, mashed, and mixed up with the meal while hot, and then covered up and allowed to remain for a time, during which they undergo a slight fermentation and evolve a quantity of carbonic acid. The chopped straw was worked in just before feeding. This trial was continued for more than four months, and found to agree with the horses, while at the same time it proved satisfactory in point of economy. As this food must be sweet and clean, great care is necessary to prevent the vessels in which it is kept from becoming sour.

The season for coughs and colds is rapidly approaching, and every one should be prepared to check the first symptoms, as a cough contracted between now and better remedy than "Johnson's Anodyne Liniment." For all diseases of the throat and lungs, it should be used internally and externally.

A Backwoods Adventure.

A Virginia banker, who was the chairman of a hotel infidel club, was once travelling through Kentucky, having with him bank bills to the amount of $25,000. When he came to a lonely forest, where robberies and murders were said to be frequent he was soon lost, through taking the wrong road. The darkness of the night came quickly over him, and how to escape from the threatening danger he know not. In his alarm he suddenly espied in a distance a dim light, and urging his horse onward, he at length came to a wretched looking cabin. He knocked; the door was opened by a woman who said her husband was out hunting, but would soon return, and she was sure he would cheerfully give him a shelter for the night. The gentleman put up his horse and entered the cabin, but with feelings that can better be imagined than described. Here he was with a large sum of money, perhaps in the house of a robber whose name was a terror to the country. In a short time the man of the house arrived. He had on a deer-skin, a bear-skin cap, and seemed much fatigued, and in no talking mood. All this boded the infidel no good. He felt for his pistols in his pockets, and placed them so as to be ready for instant use. The man asked the stranger to retire to bed, but he determined to sell his life as dearly as he couldr His fear grew into a perfect agony. What was to be done! At length the backwoodsman arose and reaching to a wooden shelf, took down an old book, and said: "Well, stranger, if you won't go to bed, I will; but it is always my custom to read a chapter in the Holy Scriptures before I go to bed." What a change did these words produce! Alarm was removed from this skeptic's mind.—Though avowing himself an infidel, he had more confidence in the Bible. He felt safe. He felt that a man who kept a Bible in his house, and read it, and bent his knees in prayer, was no robber or murderer. He listened to the good man and dismissed his fears, and lay down and slept as calmly as he did under his father's roof. From that night he ceased to revile the good old Bible.

Adulteration of Butter.

The Scientific American states that thousands of pounds of butter are daily sold in the City of New York, which are adulterated with a substance made from cotton-seed oil. It is creditable to the farmers, as a class, that they are not open to the charge of adulterating their produce; yet they suffer from the dishonest competition of dealer; who make up and sell these fraudulent compounds and by doing so affect unfavorably not only the sale but the character of the genuine article. As a matter of curiosity we descibed an artificial compound which was manufactured in Paris to supply the want of real butter during the late siege. The refuse materials left after the manufacture of stearine from fatty animal matter such as tallow, etc., consisting of an oily pasty, composed of olein and margarine, were washed in water acidulated with muriatic acid for the purpose of bleaching it. It was then subjected to the action of a chemical solution for a period of three hours during which it was made to acquire the taste of butter. This substance, manufactured without any assistance from the cows, was considered an excellent substitute for butter, and was readily accepted in place of it by the people; who considered it much superior to any other artificial product of his description.—Hearth and Home.

The New Gold Field.

Mr. Lindsay D. Simms, of Fort Garry, reached Saint Paul last evening from Manitoba, and he brings the interesting information that intense excitement prevails at Winnipeg, over recent gold discoveries at Lake Shebandowan. Many specemens of gold dust, nuggets and gold-bearing quartz had been brought to Fort Garry, and so confident were the people in general that a new Eldorado of unsurpassed richness had been discovered, that hundreds at once to the scene of the discovery, and the latest information from that region has not only fully confirmed all previous reports, but even exaggerated them to the extent of placing them among the richest mineral deposits of the world, outranking even California and Australia

The Government of the Dominion of Canada is engaged in establishing a road through the country between Fort Williams, on thunder Bay, and the settlements on the Red River Valley, but all work on this thoroughfare has been entirely suspended, the workmen, to the number of several hundred, having dropped their shovels, picks and axes, and emigrated in a body to the gold fields, where they were each washing out with their hands $4 a day and upwards. News of their remarkable success in finding gold in paying quantities had infected the sober sitizens of Winnipeg, and the prospect seemed to be that even the fears of a Fenian raid from Pembina would be forgotton in the general desire to revel among the golden sands ot Shebandowan.

There would seem to be some foundation for the reports, for the locality mentioned is in the midst of some of the richest argentiferous regions on the continent. The early explorers of a rout through the British Possessions discovered gold and silver in this vicinity, and later investigations have shewn that vast deposits of minerals are to be found along both shores of the great lake. Lake Shobandowan is about forty miles pue west from Fort William, and at least four hundred miles from Fort Garry. This lake is only about ten miles in length and about two or three in width, and forms one of the many small bodies in that section. It is bound on the south and west by a mountainous and broken country, through which flow several small and rapid streams.

Lake Shebandowan is but a short distance from Silver Islet, in Lake Superior, said to be the richest mine in the world, and not over 150 miles distant from the copper mines of Ontonagon. There are, therefore, reasonable grounds for believing that those discoveries may prove to be as valuable as they are reported, and that the extensive prospecting of experienced gold hunters which is sure to follow may yet develop mineral resources north of Lake Superior as vast as those which have attracted hundreds of thousands of people to the western slopes of America and the Islands of the Pacific.

It is unreasonable to complain because your clock stops; it cannot go on without a weight.

Useful Information.

TO PRESERVE QUINCES.—Wash the fruit, peel it, quarter or slice in pieces of uniform thickness, throw these in cold water. Then remove them to the kettle, cover with hot water, put on the lid and stew until tender. For the syrup, use half a pint of the water the quinces are boild in to each pound of sugar, and use pound for pound of sugar and fruit. When the syrup boils, skim car fully. When clear, put in the fruit, boil gently until the fruit looks clear, fifteen or twenty minutes. Take it out and lay it on a dish to cool a little, and then put it in jars; fill up with the syrup, which must boil until it thickens a little. If canned, less sugar is required in proportion, and the cans should be filled while hot, and immediately sealed.

PRESERVED QUINCES.—Choose fine yellow quinces. Pare, quarter and core them, saving both skins and cores. Put the quinces over the fire with just water enough to cover them, and simmer until they are soft, but not until they begin to break. Take them out carefully, and spread them upon broad dishes to cool. Add the parings, seeds, and cores to the water in which the quinces were boiled, and stew, closely covered, for an hour. Strain through a jelly-bag, and for every pint of this liquid allow a pound of sugar. Boil up and skim it, put in the fruit and boil fifteen minutes. Take all from the fire and pour into a large, deep pan. Cover closely and let it stand twenty-four hours. Drain off the syrup and let it come to a boil; put in the quinces carefully and boil another quarter of an hour. Take them up as dry as possible, and again spread out upon dishes, setting these in the hottest sunshine you can find. Boil the syrup until it begins to jelly; fill the jars two-thirds full, and cover with the syrup. The preserves should be of a fine red. Cover them with brandied tissue paper.

QUINCE JELLY.—Take the parings, cores, and scraps of fruit, also the liquid that the quinces were boild in, in the proportions of one half-pint of water to one pound of parings and cores. Boil them until very soft; strain through a linen bag. To each pint of strained juce allow one pound of loaf sugar, or granulated. If the quinces are fine ones, it is not necessary to boil the syrup after the sugar is added. Boil the liquor five minutes and stir in the sugar quickly until melted; then pour into forms. The flavor of the fruit is better preserved by this method. If, however, the sugar is boiled in the liquor, test it after boiling awhile by holding a spoonful in the open air; it will soon congeal if all is right. It is an improvement to pour some of this jelly over the preserved quinces, having less fruit in the jars. In making quince jelly it is all-important to have well-grown fruit. Quince jelly is less apt to be "rope" if a portion of the seed be removed from the cores.

PLANTING TREES IN THE FALL.—We are beginning to find that the larger and hardier kind of fruit trees, as well as any ornamental ones, can be made to succeed better by fall planting—if well done—than when planted in spring. The constantly recurring spring drouths tell heavily on spring planted trees, and the losses this year will be heavy.

Fall planted trees, if on land well prepared and surface drained, will take hold of the soil and make an early start in the spring, and thus be ready to battle against the dry weather when it comes. It has been discovered that all the small fibres in the roots die out when a tree is transplanted, no matter at what time. In fall planted trees, the new roots will commence to grow the same fall that they are planted, if there is enough heat; and if not, they will start with the first warmth of spring. It is a good plan to put some long, but not too strong, manure round the roots to remain as a mulch till spring.

TO CLEAN BRASS.—Rub the surface of metal with rotton stone and speet oil, then rub off with a piece of cotton flannel and polish with soft leather. A solution of oxalic acid rubbed over tarnished brass soon removes the tarniah, rendering the metal bright. The acid must be washed off with water, and the brass rubbed with whiting and soft leather. A mixture of muriatic acid and alum disolved in water, imparts a golden color to brass articles that are steeped in it for a few seconds.

PRESERVING CITRONS.—Pare the citron, and cut in inch squares, or any shape desired, removing all seeds. To nine pounds of fruit, take eight pounds of white sugar, seven fresh lemons and two ounces green ginger; boil the citrons in clear water; sufficient to cover it, until quite tender then drain from the water and lay on dishes; as soon as cold, sprinkle one-third of the sugar over it, and let it stand over night. Next morning dissolve the balance of the sugar in fresh water. then pour in the citron and ginger, which must be scraped clean, and cut in small pieces; also throw in the cloves, which must be tied in Swiss, so as to be easily taken out; boil until the citron is transparent; when nearly so, add the limons; they must be cut in thin slices and the seeds removed, and should not boil over fifteen minutes. Citron prepared in this manner is delicious, and will keep nicely in stone jars.—Country Gentleman.

Shocking Murder by two Boys!

A sad incident occurred at Steubenville County, N. Y., Infirmary a few days ago, resulting a horrible death, the burning of a young lad named Murphy, aged five years, a real-footed child, who was deserted by the mother to steal her chances. It appears that two other pauper children, named Philip Sheridan and Andy Stuart, dug a large hole in the orchard adjoining the infirmary.

After effecting this part of the diabolical act, the two little fiends, whose ages are respectably five and ten years, repaired to the infirmity grounds and caught the real-footed boy and carried him to his living grave.—Shrieking, yet without power of being heard, the little victim was caught by the young executioners and forced into the hole. Holding him down, they shovelled in the earth and stones upon his writhing body, stifling his cries as best they could until the poor, deformed body ceased to struggle, and the spirit took its flight to Him who gave it.

The two young murderers went back to the house without informing anyone of the deed, and the boys absence was first noticed by Mr. Porter, the superintendant, about 1 o'clock. Upon making inquiries a little black boy informed him that Andy Stuart and Phil Sheridan had "buried 'Limpy' down in the holler." On going to the spot Mr. Porter found the newly made grave, and below the surface the lifeless form of 'limpy.' The little murders have been sent to the reformery. This is one of the saddest incidents we ever had to record.

A Justifiable Scare.

Kingston had a great scare, according to the Whig, on Wednesday last, and there were some justifications for it. Some children got into the Artillery Park Barrack grounds and started a fire among some dry leaves and dry wood, which soon communicated to the main building, which was a dry old structure, and would speedly have converted it into ashes had not tee wits of one of the Sergeants discovered it, and by prompt effect it was distinguished. But the scare came in afterwards, when it was discovered that the building which was on fire contained the guns and limbers of the Kingstons Field Battery, and the latter were filled with ammunition, shot, shell grape and cannister, although over 600 rounds. This very large complement had been ordered to be kept in the limbers as a matter of precaution since the first Fenan Raid called this Volunteer Troop into service. Had the fire got to where the ammunition was it probably a series of explosions would have occured, causing a terrible destruction of property and life in the neighbourhood. The militia staff and city authorities were considerably excited over it the next day, and a report was made to the Militia Department Lt. Col. Jarvis D. A. G., resolved not to assume the responsibility of allowing the explosive material to remain any longer where it is now, and has ordered its removal to the magazine at Fort Henry.—Intelligencer

The Highland Inn.

Salmon of forty pounds weight are sometimes caught in Lock Eck, a fact that renders the little inn at Whitesfield, a favorite resort of solitary anglers. In reference to the quondam hostess of this inn, a celebrated living artist and enthusiastic fisherman tells the following story:

I was once fishing in Lock Eck," said the artist, "but had caught nothing, and on my arrival at Whitesfield, very hungery and thirsty, I inquired of the honest Highland woman who keeps the place if I could have anything for dinner."

"'Oh, ay she replied, 'coy thing you like to order, sir.

"'Well, then, can you let me have a little bit of salmon or a trout?'

"'A'm vara sorra, but there's no salmon and no troot. There were some trovers, (drovers) here yesterday, and just ate up a' the salmont and a' the troot. But you can have any thing else you like.'

"'Can you let me have a beefsteak?'

"'Is it beef ye askin' for? Beef? There's no beefs do you think we can kill a coo?'

"'Well mutton chops will do just as well.'

"'Chops!' she repl'ied with a melancholy whine; 'chops! ye might hae had chops, ye see the trovers were here yesterday and they ate up a' the chops.'

"'You don't seem to have very much to choose from, my good woman; but perhaps you can let me have some ham-and-eggs or bacon-and-eggs. I don't care which?'

"'Ham-and-eggs! Lord save us! There's not a bit of ham left in the house. The trovers, ye see—'

"'Oh, confound the trovers! Can you give me some eggs without the ham?'

"'Deed, sir, that's just what I canna dae; the troversi heeh! they're hungry callante, and can eat mair eggs than a' the hens in the country-side can lay.— They didna leave me a single egg for my sin supper yesternight; but you can hae ony thing else ye like to ca' for.'

"'Suppose, then, as you have no eggs, that you thaw' (twist) the neck of the hen that laid them.'

"'Deed sir, I would dea that right willingly, but the troverss, ye see—the troverss! They not only ate up a' the eggs, but the hen and cock as well!'.

"'Then I suppose I can have nothing, and must walk on to Kilmun?'

"'Na na! Wat for should ye do that? There's plenty in the house, if ye wad but aya what ye want.'

"'Plenty of what?'

"'Plenty of cake' (oat-cake), 'and butter, an' o' ewe-milk cheese, and whiskey' (whiskey 'enough to scom' (swim) in.'

"So I took the oat-cake, and the fresh butter, and the whisker; and I advise nobody to expect anything else at a Highland village."

FURS---ATTENTION.

The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in furs against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.

Montreal and Toronto shows a good sample of dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.

He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a safe guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.

The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.

I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as strangers, to the inspection of my furs, which are not represented under fictitious names.

Editorial Items.

There was no meeting of the School Board on Tuesday evening. No quorum.

Hay is now $18 a ton, and some days $20 is realized,

Mr. Woodruff, of Welland Canal notoriety has been dismissed,

The Brantford Courier now publishes an evening paper.

The Goderich Signal says the lake shore in that vicinity never before presented such a scene of shipwrecks as at present.

A dreadful famine prevails in Persia; over 20,000 persons have perished in the Capital. Hardly a city of Persia but is suffering.

The weather has been cold, with a hard frost for some days; but there is the appearance of a change, and the hope of some open weather yet.

Barrager, who poisoned his wife, at Brighton, Ontario, last summer, was sentenced to be hung on the 14th of December, at Cobourg. Brighton and its neighborhood is somewhat noted for cases of wife poisoning.

Dr. McCullough, of this town, gained his case against the Core District Mutual Insurance Company. This was the third trial, the jury not agreeing in the former two cases. The verdict was for $800, and $62 interest. Some companies are too fond of allowing themselves to be sued before payment of the amounts claimed.

Mr Rule, the carter, was almost driving into the Otonabee River on Tuesday evening, near the entrance to the new bridge. He had been thirsty himself, and his horse in turn becoming so, went down the bank of the river for a drink; fortunately, parties passing came in time to prevent them both getting into the river.

We have received a letter from our esteemed friend, James Miller, Esq., Reeve of Otonabee, now on a visit to his native country. He was in Newcastle-on-Tyne, when he wrote us, on his way toward London, but intended returning northward again before leaving for his Canadian home. We have his authority for saying that on his safe arrival here, he will be a candidate for the Reeveship again. His numerous friends will be glad to learn that he is well. He will leave Scotland this month.

The reformers of North Simcoe have arranged for a public meeting of delegates to nominate candidates for the approaching elections. Candidates from each township are expected, at the rate of one for every 50 electors.

What are the Reformers of this County doing? Success is certain at the next election if even moderate earnestness prevail. The Combinationists are trembling, their pulsations are quicker than ever heretofore. They know defeat is certain. We therefore ask the liberal, true Reformers of the County to be preparing, the day may come before they are aware.

At Detroit lately the conductor of a Pullman Palace Car on the Central Railroad put fire on for the purpose of raising steam to heat the car before starting. He then stretched himself for an easy snooze. The boiler, from some cause, exploded while he was asleep, and took the timbers and ceiling of the car with it, and also the sleeping conductor, depositing him, somewhat frightened, and a little scalded, on the gravel outside. This was a narrow escape.

BECOME A DOUBLE CURSE.—A genius of Cayuga Township has distilled from the stalks of the Canadian thistle, a spirit containing 35 per cent of alcohol. He calls the stuff Thistle whiskey. And he proposes to ruin the good name of the Canadian Thistle by using it to make this curse. Farmers know that the Canadian Thistle in its natural state is bad enough, but distilled and turned into whiskey it will be ten times worse The Ontario Reformer says Jackasses are very fond of Thistles and thinks none but such will imbibe "Thistle Whiskey."

The Ontario Reformers says:—A whole souled right spirited young lady of Oshawa expressed herself to him thus: "I never have had, nor never will have, anything to do with a person who uses intoxicating liquors." Her name deserves to be handed down to future generations as a noble young lady. If the ladies showed their hatred of whiskey and tobacco, by refusing to keep company with whiskey soaked, embryo drunkards and tobacco users. Doctors would have less to do with delirium tremens, and Dentists less trouble with filthy mouths. We once had the misfortune to be roomed for one night with a tippling tobacco user, which so completely annoyed us, that we have since wondered how ladies could sit in the same room with such fellows, much less take one of them for a companion for life. The smell of whiskey and tobacco combined is sufficient to drive rats from a cellar, and why not a lady out of the same room from a drinking, smoking chewing simpleton. Let every lady in our new Dominion do as this Oshawa young lady did, only add tobocco to the discarded things, and soon Canada will be free from the curse which ruins so many of both sexes.

SUPPOSED MURDER AT OSHAWA.—A woman was found drowned in Oshawa on Sunday morning, she and her husband lived very unhappily together; on Saturday evening they were seen near the water where her body was found. There were marks of a scuffle on the bank, and in her dead hand was found tufts of his hair, which she is supposed to have pulled out while he was trying to put her in.

The census of Great Britain shows that out of about 31,500,000 people, only 30,000 are landholders.

The Telegraph says the Local Legislature will meet for business on the 7th of December.

The decision on the East Toronto controverted election was not given on the 7th inst., as Mr. Cameron was from home.

The first train on the Toronto and Muskoka Railway will, it is expected, run to Orillia during next week.

The Protestant churches of the Dominion, of all denominations, will hold Thanksgiving services on Thursday, 15th instant.

Religious meetings are held by Messrs. Carroll and Russell, Evangelists, every evening (except Saturday) in the Baptist Church.

Mails from St. Johns, N. B., now reach Montreal via the European and North American Railway in forty-eight hours after leaving the former city.

On Thursday last, on the Fenelon road, near Lindsay, a span of horses were crushed to death by a tree which was blown down by the high wind. Three persons who were in the waggon escaped unhurt.

"Wood's Household Magazine" for November has been received. Contents are very varied. It is an excellent family paper; only $1 per annum; published by S. S. Wood & Co., Neburgh, N. Y.

Two girls named Ada Brown, of Buckfield, and Anna Wood, of Harford, were seen at one o'clock, on Tuesday, to leap into the deepest channel of the Niagara Falls, with their arms interlocked. The bodies have not yet been found.

FURNITURE:—We would remind our readers that Mr. Geo. Tanner has removed again to his own building, Hunter Street, and there will be glad to meet his old friends and as many new ones as shall favor him with a call. He still keeps on hand a large stock of furniture. Give Mr. Tanner a call at his old stand.

At a late meeting of the Railway Committe, Mr. Fairbairn resigned being Chairman on account of his removal to Lindsay, as it would be inconvenient for him to attend to matters requiring immediate action. Sheriff Hall was appointed in his stead. A resolution was passed tendering Mr Fairbairn the thanks of the Committee for the manner in which he had discharged the duties of Chairman.

AUBURN SABBATH SCHOOL:—The Anniversary Services of this school were held on Tuesday evening last, in the school room. The entertainment consisted of songs, recitations and dialogues, by the scholars, and addresses from friends of the school, and was in all respects a decided success. The singing under the direction of Mrs. Kindred, was particularly good, and great credit is due to this lady for the pains which she has taken to train the scholars in the service of song. The attendance was large and a very handsome sum was realized, which will be expended in providing books for the school library.

FIRE BRIGADE:—The annual meeting of Protection Fire Brigade of Peterboro, was held in the Firemen's Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 7th inst, when the following were elected officers for the ensuing year:—J. O'Donnell, Capt. of Brigade; H. Robertson, 1st Lieut.; George McBurney, 2nd Lieut.; Maurice Dunsford, Secretary; R. O. Helm, Assistant Secretary; Albert Hall, Treasurer; George Fitzgerald, 1st Branchman; G. Hall, 2nd Branchman; Geo. May, 3rd Branchman; James English, Engineer; J. Marshall, Capt. of Hose; Geo. Hutchinson, Lieut. of Hose; J. Irwin and G. McWilliams, Axemen; W. Langford, Capt. of Hook and Ladder; W. J. Martin, Lieut. of Hook and Ladder.

DROWNED.—The Lindsay Warder says we received the following too late for last issue.—On Friday last, a man named McDermott was drowned on Lake Scugog. It appears he was coming over in a canoe from the Island to Port Hoover, when the storm arose, and the frail bark he was in upset. The body was not recovered untill Saturday; when found he was standing upright grasping a paddle in his hand. Coroner Andrews, of Little Britain, held an inquest on the body on Saturday evening, and a verdict in accordance with the above facts was returned. McDermott was past middle age; whether a widower or not we have not ascertained, or if he leaves a family dependent on him for support, he has children, however, grown up and doing for themselves.

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.—The Acadian, we think it is, gives currency to a story that the Commissioners of the Intercolonial are anxious to get the chief engineer to resign because he will not give certificates to some of the contractors for more work done than he really finds done. Can this really be true? There are reasons enough to induce us to believe it. Men who boast of the influence of money to keep themselves in power, and yet do not blush, are likely enough to seek to make supporters by any means. Col. Grey was kept in office, although convicted of the most glaring acts of pocketing undue mileage. Dr. Tupper was supported by the whole weight of the Government after having openly sought to bribe a senator contrary to his judgements and conscience. For sixteen years office has been retained by using the public funds freely in fat contracts. And what right have we now to doubt that corruption will still be resorted to to make to themselves friends of unrighteousness.

A NEEDLE PENETRATING A CHILD'S BREAST JUST BELOW THE REGION OF THE HEART:—We regret to learn that on Sunday while a child of Mr. John Brown, Cabinet Maker, of this Town, aged 7 years, was being dressed by a sister a little older, and while being placed on the sofa for the purpose, he held a stick in his hand in which he had stuck a needle. The point being towards him the needle penetrated between two ribs below the heart and broke, leaving a portion in the breast of the poor child. At first breathing would so elevate the skin as to indicate the position of the broken part, and an attempt was made to remove it, but in vain, as no small instrument was present to take hold with. Dr. Harvey was immediately called in, and afterwards Dr. O'Sullivan and Dr. Burrit, but they were all unable to reach the portion left in the breast, as it had moved inward; no doubt the working to get it out tended somewhat to push it in. The poor child is still in great danger, as the medical men are unable to say what the result may be How simply a serious accident may at times occur that may baffle the power of physicians to deal with.

Ennismore.

Understanding that the Bishop of Kingston was to lay the corner stone of the new R. C. Church now being erected in Enniamore, on Thursday last, we repaired to that place for the purpose of witnessing the ceremony, but were somewhat disappointed as the Bishop did not come, he being indisposed at the house of Father Coyle, at Downieville. We learned that the ceremonies are deferred till spring. The foundation of the Church is laid and ready for commencing the brick work, which it is intended to commence early in the spring. The building is to be 70 feet in length; 40 feet wide; and the side walls, we believe, 22 feet high, with a neat tower. The contract, price of stone and brick work: roof, windows, floor and doors, or of the building without pews or altar, is $1,930, and the people find everything. The Church will, therefore, cost not less than $4,000 to $5,000 when completed. It will be handsomely situated on a nice rising ground not far from the centre of the Township. Father Coyle, the present parish priest of Enniamore, is a warm friend of temperance, and in doing much to persuade his people to refrain from intoxicating liquors, and does not fail to discountenance intemperance, and the general system of "treating" which prevails amongst warm-hearted Irishmen; and this assuredly is the way to ensure the prosperity of the people.

After spending an hour or two very pleasantly, although somewhat disappointed in the object of our journey, we returned homeward. We, however, found that the leading road through Enniamore is not in the best state for travel. It is cut up in ruts and likely to be worse ere winter sets in. Now that the principal travel of the people of the Township is toward the floating bridge, the Council should make an effort to get the road well gravelled, doing the worst parts first. There is nothing which tends more to the comfort, or shows more industry and prosperity of a people than good roads; and now that Enniamore has easy means of access and egress over the lakes, they should take a little pride in improving their thoroughfare. The soil of Enniamore is excellent and the settlers are becoming wealthy; many of them have their carriages and buggies and pleasure sleighs, and those who have not, very soon will: hence the wisdom of not being behind their neighbors in the matter of good roads.

The Mud Lake bridge is now in a very passable state, except as to a few of the rails being off. The approach on the Enniamore side is fearfully rough, but a very few loads of gravel would remedy this. We noticed that the boom is very close to the bridge. This, we believe, is a mistake. The ice in spring, it is well known, has a powerful effect on the boom, and very often drags it some distance. At present it can do so only a few feet until it must strike the bridge, and then we fear the old tale will have to be told again. It is as it is, however, and results must be borne.

Presbyterian Union.

The question of union of the bodies of Presbyterians in Canada has been very much marred by the discussion of the wisdom of maintaining Queen's College, Kingston, by the united church.—The members of the Canada Presbyterian Church appearing anxious to drop that institution, and maintain only Knox's College, permitting their students for the ministry to obtain the secular part of their education wherever they please. On the other hand, the old Kirk Presbyterians appear desirous to link Queen's College on to the union, and thereby continue the secular and spiritual together.

The Free Church has long and nobly contended, individually, for the separation of the two systems, declaring it to be the work of the State to afford a secular education, but of the Church, a religious education. This is the only wise policy, and it is to be hoped for the sake of our future Dominion, that those two bodies will now do nothing that will be calculated to undo what the Presbyterian Church has done. No greater evil can be inflicted on a state than the continual application of religious denomination for denominational aid. It is not long since Canada had a trial of it. The real good of the Country was lost sight of in the strong desire to obtain aid for those institutions fostered by the denominations. Unscrupulous statesmen took advantage of the divided public, and by bribing, so to speak, a denomination secured its influence.

This has been removed so far as Ontario is concerned, and the Canada Presbyterians did much to bring it about. By retaining Queen's College and leaving the United body to support it, as will as their really denominational Institution for the training of the ministry. The necessity might yet appear of applying for state aid for the secular, and thus again involve the church as a whole in politics, which would be unwise. Indeed, it would be better to delay the union until better terms can be secured, than to hastily place the united church in a troublesome and dangerous position. Besides the maintaining of secular Institutions would greatly impede the spiritual work of the church, limiting its means, through the expenditure for secular education, which now can be easily avoided, and which every lover of his country wishes the great and leading body of Presbyterians may avoid, and rather sacrifice the union for a few years than compromise itself.

ANOTHER RAILWAY HORROR.—Cincinnati, O., Nov. 4.—While the mail train going east was standing at the depot this morning, and while the fireman taking coal, the engine boiler exploded. Geo. Valkner, was engaged in shovelling coal from the car, was blown 50 feet in the air and fell a mangled corpse 200 yards distant. Adam Schilling, fireman, was instantly killed, the top of his head having been bloon off. Henry Burt, fireman, and Adam Wamster were injured. Fragments of the boiler weighing from thirty to fifty lbs were blown several squares and fell through the roofs of houses. The front of the boiler was blown foreward and burried in the rear end of the express car. The boiler had just been patched up; it was twenty years old and considered in bad condition. The depot was badly wrecked. But few persons had arrived at the depot before the explosion, or the loss of life would have been much greater.

King Louis, of Bavaria, has forbidden all officers in the army joining the Masonic order.

(From the Manitoba Liberal)

"On the morning of the 5th of Oct. the Fenians, or more properly the French Half-breeds—some from Red River and some from St. Joe and Pembina—crossed over and attacked the Hudson's Bay Company's Fort at Pembina. When first seen they were about 700 yards from the boundary line of the Ashberton side. Mr. Douglass, the officer in charge of the American custom house, went in the direction of the Fort, when a man on horseback, armed with a rifle, overtook him and ordered him to stop and return with him. This man was O'Donoghue, and the armed body of men who halted in front of the custom house was his party. A guard of several men was left at the custom house, after which the remainder of the party proceeded to the Hudson's Bay Fort taking Mr. Douglass along with them a prisoner. On arriving at the Fort, the party halted at the little gate, and an officer and two men entered the room of Mr. Watt who was in charge of the post, and demanded its surrender in the name of the Provisional Government of Red River. They took possession of every thing in the Fort and the keys of the ware house and store and also of the gates. They took large quantities of provisions and other property belonging to the H. B. Company and loaded them in a waggon which they had brought with them, and which, when loaded, they drove away. All this time Mr. Watt and his clerk and the other men employed about the Fort were prisoners and under the strict surveillance of armed men. From the customs office this party took the customs flag, a telescope, a revolver, and other articles, after which they locked the door and took the key away with them."

Col. Wheaton shortly after took O'Neil prisoner, and some others, but after a mock trial they were discharged. O'Donoghue and Riel were in perfect understanding, and it is believed that the most of the French half breeds were with them.

Riel, however, soon found that his little game of taking the province was played out, offered his services to Governor Archibald, who received him with open arms, and thanked him in the name of the Queen, for his tendered services. Such profound mockery and presumption was hardly ever witnessed in any part of Her Majesty's Dominion before, and go far to prove the want of wisdom in John A. McDonald and Cartier in sending such a man as Lieut. Governor. He is likely soon to be recalled, and Mr. Morris sent in his place.

Galletly's Concert.

On Tuesday evening (Hallowe'en) a goodly number of the people of Keene and vicinity, took the advantage of the opportunity offered them and attended the concert given by Mr. Galletly, in our Village, on the 31st of October, in the Victoria House Assembly Rooms.—Some time before eight, the hour appointed to begin, many, with smiling faces, were thronging the door, anxious to gain admission. The appointed hour found the Hall well filled with ladies, and, as afterwards proved, a highly appreciative audience.

The programme was a good one, and admirably performed throughout. Miss Gerrie's singing is undoubtedly good, and shows a careful training, through long years of practice. The clearness and precision with which she pronounces her words, and the adaption of her voice to, and rendering of songs of different nations, are characteristics possessed by few—she is justly styled the "Canadian Scottish Nightingale." Mr. Galletly, as a vocalist, is well known and appreciated wherever he goes; having, as well as Miss Gerrie, sang in the cities of our fair Dominion, and renders the songs of his native land in their own true style. Miss Adeline Galletly elicited much admiration, probably on account of her tender age, she bids fair to be a rival singer.

The concert was opened with piano solo, by Mr. Bell, organist St. John's Church, Peterboro. This Gentleman accompanied the songs with precision and taste, closely following the singer—few pianists can play Scotch accompaniments, the singer requiring so much "ad libitum," but Mr. Bell was equal to the task, on the occasion. It would take too long to detail the merits of each piece as it was performed, yet it would be injustice not to mention the fine rendering, by Miss Gerie, of the Irish song "Come back to Erin," also the "Camer on Man," and, by Mr. Galletly, of "Hail to the Chief," and the humorous song, "Hame came our Guid Man at e'en."

The song, "I'm owre young to marry yet," by Miss A. Galletly, deserves special mention, then came the Duett by Mr. Galletly and Miss Gerie, "When ye gang awa Jamie," followed by an encore, amidst roars of applause by, "My Spouse Nancy." Then "Auld Lang Syne," and the National Anthem. The audience dispersed highly pleased with the entertainment. The piano used on the occasion was kindly loaned by a lady resident of the village. Should a sufficient number come forward, Mr. Galletly intends opening a singing class in the village. It is hoped that the young ladies and gentleman will embrace the opportunity of perfecting themselves in the entertaining art, and all join Mr. Galletly's class.—Com.

Monaghan Council.

October 28th, 1871.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment. Present the Reeve, and Councillors Robson, Tully and Birney.

A By-law was passed dividing the Township into two electoral divisions for next Municipal election of Reeve and Councillors. Mr. Wm. Smith, Teacher, was appointed Returning Officer for No. 1 Division, to be held at School House, in No. 2 School Section. Mr. W. Wood Township Clerk, Returning Officer for No. 2 Divison, to be held at the Town Hall.

Councillors Birney and Robson were appointed to advertise and sell timber on road allowance, on Lot No. 7, between the 8th and 9th Concessions.

The bond of the Collector, as signed by himself, and James Braley and Thos Bradburn, was laid before the council approved of. Time for collection of taxes to the 16th December

Miss Agnes Strickland has received a pension of $500 per annum from the British government, in recognition of her historical works.

The Petrolia Advertiser says:—

Rev. W. M. Roger preached his farewell sermons on Sabbath morning and evening last, in the Presbyterian church. On both occasions the respect in which Mr. Roger is held was well testified by the largeness of the congregation. The commodious church could scarcely afford seats to the hearers, and the eloquent discourses of Mr. Roger were listened to with the most marked attention.

During the two years and a half for which Mr. Roger has held the pastorate of the Presbyterian church, he and his amiable lady have succeeded in gaining, not only the affectionate regards of his own congregation, but the universal esteem of the community, of whatever denomination. Ever foremost in good works, Mr. Roger's endeavours for the advancement of his charge have been faithful and unremitting and well merited the success which has attended them. During the period mentioned the membership of his church here trebled itself, and the Wyoming congregation has also received such large additions as to warrant the late erection of a new church building. The tract society, of which Mr Rogers was the chief promoter, and in which he was chief worker, has now attained a position of established usefulness; and his effects in the cause of temperance and all other directions where good was to be accomplished, are too well known to need reference.

On Wednesday evening last, a meeting was held in the Presbyterian Church, and was very largely attended, to express the regret of the congregation and the public at parting with the pastor of the church, Rev. W. M. Roger. Rev. Mr. Mitchell, the chairman opened the meeting, and proceedings commenced by the serving of refreshments, most liberaly provided by the ladies. Those being attending to, addresses by the contributors presented to Mr. Roger a purse containing $126, and Mr. Alex. Cruise, on behalf of Mrs. Roger's Bible Class, presented that lady with an album and some handsome volumns of poetry. Mr. Roger, on his own account and that of Mrs. Roger, replied in suitable terms. Remarks by Dr. Oliver, Mr. Fairbank, and the chairman followed. Our space does not permit us to give a full report of the remarks made on the occasion, but we may say that one and all of the speakers joined in bearing evidence to the esteem in which Mr. Roger was held, in expressing regret at his departure, and in wishing him success in his new field.—The proceedings were enlivened by music, from Mr. E Tupper's singing class, and Miss McLean, Miss Boyce, and Mr. Lloyd. At the close a vote of thanks was passed to the singing class and to the ladies and gentlemen named for their service, also to the speakers on the occasion and the chairman, and the meeting closed with the doxology.

FEEDING POTATOES TO HORSES.—In Germany, where potatoes are so much cheaper than grain, the experiment has been repeatedly tried of feeding horses upon them, at least in part, and this, as we understand, has provided successful. In one instance five four-horse teams were kept hard at work and in good condition on a daily ration, for the twenty horses, of 1 1-2 cwts. of hay, 8 bushels of potatoes, 50 pounds of meal, and a liberal allowance of chopped straw. The potatoes were at sained, mashed, and mixed up with the meal while hot, and then covered up and allowed to remain for a time, during which they undergo a slight fermentation and evolve a quantity of carbonic acid. The chopped straw was worked in just before feeding. This trial was continued for more than four months, and found to agree with the horses, while at the same time it proved satisfactory in point of economy. As this food must be sweet and clean, great care is necessary to prevent the yeast in which it is kept from becoming sour.

THE MANUFACTURER AND BUILDER.—The unprecedented success of this excellent industrial monthly is rapidly placing it at the head of the periodicals of its class. The November number, which has just been received, is filled with useful and valuable articles, illustrated with a lavish profusion of finely executed engravings. Our readers who are not familiar with this journal would do well to examine it, not only for its merits as a literary production but as an invaluable advertising medium for all interested in scientific or industrial pursuits. Reaching as it does, some 150,000 readers, it needs no better recommendation as a means disseminating information. In the issue before us, we notice articles on "Home and Messmer," "Improvements on the Sunbeam," "Mother of Pearl and Pearl inlaying," "Revelations concerning the Management of the American Institute Fair," "Free Institute of Learning," "Progress in Meteorological Science," and many others. Published by Western & Co., 37 Park Row, New York. $2 per year.

DISASTROUS FIRE.—St. Catherines, Nov. 8.—A disastrous fire occured here yesterday morning about 2.30. At that hour the flames were discovered issuing from the large sale and livery stables of Messrs. Stinson & May, Ontario street, which were speedily destroyed. Nine horses were burned to death, two of them valuable animals owned by Dr. E. Goodwin. The buildings adjoining, occupied as fruit store by Lee & Riley, were also destroyed. The Welland House closets were burned. The house itself was somewhat damaged from the intens heat. A house on the opposite side of the street, occupied by Mr. Baker, Mr. Riley and Mrs. Adie, was damaged considerably by fire and water. The fire at one time threatening to extend over a very large district. Stinson & May's loss is about $12,000, insured for $5,000, and the total loss is about $17,000. The total insurance being $6,650.

Beautiful it is to understand and know that a thought did never yet die; that as thou, the originator thereof, hast gathered it and created it from the whole past, so thou wilt transmit it to the whole future. It is thus that the heroic heart, the seeing eye of the first times, still feels and sees in us of the latest; that the wise man stands ever encompassed and spiritually embraced by a cloud of witnesses an brothers: and there is a living literal communion of saints, wide as the world itself, and as all the history of the world.—Carlyle.

CORRESPONDENCE.

New R. C. Church.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

SIR,—During a visit to the Township of Enniamore, last week, we were shown the site for the new Roman Catholic Church, now about to be erected. The foundation, which is already built, is of stone, broken courses, and is 70 feet long, by 40 feet in width; with tower on the north side 16 ft. square. The walls of main building will be of red brick, and will be 22 feet in height, with tower, also of brick 20 feet above apex of roof. The contractor, Mr. T. D. M. Croley, with his usual energy has pushed forward the work since the contract was signed, and has received every assistance from the Committee, who have shown themselves anxious, and determined that every facility should be afforded the contractor in carrying on the work. Everything is prepared to proceed with the brick work as the earliest opening of spring; and no doubt the edifice will be ready for service during the ensuing summer. When complete the church will be a credit to the township; and we are confident that the contractor, and Mr. Telford, under whose superintendence the church will be erected, will do their utmost to have the contract fulfilled satisfactorily.

The Catholics of Enniamore are greatly indebted to the indefatigable zeal of their worthy Pastor, Father Coyle, by whose efforts and labors the largest share of the funds, necessary for the erection of the church, has been provided. Indeed, so zealous is the Reverend Gentleman in this matter, that he has himself contributed and paid to the Treasurer of the Committee the large sum of five hundred dollars in aid of the good work, feeling that the primitive log building, which has been used as a church by the Catholics of Enniamore for the past thirty years, should be replaced by a structure more worthy of the people, and of the religion which they profess. The Reverend Gentleman informed me that he had, in his labours, met with many acts of substantial sympathy from his Protestant and Catholic friends in the County; and he trusts that he may continue to receive from them such substantial aid in repleting his treasury until the completion of the church.

I am,

Your obedient servant,

CATHOLICUS.

Peterboro, November 8, 1871.

We have received the following interesting account of the trip of J. Millar, Esq., who is now in Scotland, his native land, which will be found worthy of pursual.

Mr. Editor, believing that a brief narrative of events since leaving home would be interesting to you, and perhaps some of your readers, I have penned the following curs ry sketch of things, which you may use if you deem them worthy.

On the 11th of September last Cobourg by the Steamer "Abyssinian," Capt. Estes, for Montreal, fare, seven dollars; Cabin and State room, but as the boat was crowded, with pleasure seekers, chiefly Americans, The state-rooms were mostly taken up by ladies. We unfortunates, from Port Hope and Cobourg, were glad to get a bed in the lower cabin, and a poor one it was.—The boat was fast; we had a good run to Prescott, touching at Kingston and Gananoque. Passing the Thousand Islands, we saw the American propeller, Michigan, hard aground in the American channel, near French Creek, also five schooners, heavily laden, in tow of one of Calvin & Brock's tug boats. We reached Prescot at 10 a. m., changed boats and got on board the Royal Mail Steamer, Brockes, (meaning the wife of a ghost). Captain Bailey Readily permitted me to ascend the hurricane dock, where I had a splendid view, and whence I saw many places which were familiar to me in my younger days. I found Drummond and other islands, which were formerly tobacitoes, now occupied, and many buildings on them; the smaller ones had many cattle and horses pasturing upon them, but the pasture was very brown and stunted, the same as in our own country in July and August. Having passed the Gallops and Rapid Dupluis, and the Village of Matilda, and while passing "Chrysoller's Farm," in East Williamsborough, where the battle was fought in 1812, in which the Americans suffered defeat, under General Wilkinson, by one regiment of regulars and Indians, and one regiment of the brave Glengarry Highlanders, of Canada. Some loyalist hoisted the dear old flag as we passed, and the compliment was duly acknowledged by the captain.—Touching at Cornwall, I saw very little change; I think that the Attorney General of Ontario has done as little for that town as he intends doing for Strathroy. After passing through all the rapids, we reached Montreal, at 6 p. m. Some took the Quebec boat, but the majority remained in Montreal to see the Lnguoil Regatta. The wind, however, blew too stiff hence the regatta did not come off that day. I put up at the Albion, a good hotel; fare $1.50 per day.

On the 14th I took passage on the steamer Quebec, Captain LaBelle, a floating palace, one of the Richelieu Company's boats. Captain and crew are French Canadians—most obliging and attentive to the passengers. We arrived at Quebec at 5 a. m. next morning, passed in the stream, at anchor, H. M. Screw Steamship (iron clad) Royal Alfred, Admiral Fanshawl commanding, with a crew of 700 men on board.—The Governor General, Baron Lisgar, went on board; a royal salute was fired, and the yards manned in his honor. It was very pretty sight to see the crew running up the rigging with the agility of cats, and the manner in which each man took his station spoke volumes for their drill and discipline. I visited the Quebec Agricultural Exhibition. The show of carriages and machinery was very good, but the show of grain, especially fall wheat, was not to be compared with our county show; and, with the exception of two bulls, the show of horned cattle was very poor. There were two good stallions, I think partly Clydes, but the draught horses would not pass for 3rd prize at the Otonabee Show. I was wishing that I had my grey span there which have taken first prize for the last two years at the East Riding of Peterborough County Show, I could have knocked the spots out of the Quebecers. The sheep, pools, and everything else I saw was not to be compared to our County shows.

On the 15th I embarked on board the S. S. St David, bound for Glasgow, Capt. E. Scott commander. I paid for the round trip, saloon fare, $120; the boat was very comfortable, an excellent table was kept equal to the best hotels in Ontario. The Captain was both a gentlemen and a sailor. Dr. Stewart, of Edinburgh and Glasgow was surgeon—and the crew all told was 68 in number, and a better set of fellows I never saw. Taking a Canadian pilot on board she steamed down the river, leaving Quebec between 6 and 10 a.m., for the dear old Broomielaw, after an absence of 42 years and 3 months. Steaming with a gentle breeze we reached Father Point, about midnight, where the pilot left us. It was a lovely day and we passed numerous French villages, leaves of the grand old forest trees are falling. I often think of Otonabee, the river, kind friend where lonely). I remember, too, both Ashburnham, and the big village on the west side of the river, where the homes of many the different clergymen pray for those at sea. It is very pleasant to think we are remembered by them at home when we are so far beyond their reach. To-day we passed one of the Gulf Steamers belonging to the Allan Line, the distance run since yesterday, as shown by the log, was 180 miles.

Sept. 18th, 5 a. m. A nice breeze, clear weather, and all sail set, every prospect of a good run to-day, going 10 knots an hour; 12 m. weather thick, wind ahead, took in all sail, distance run since yesterday, 150 miles. Steaming on steadily, occasionally sounding, the weather being foggy. About 5 p. m. sighted Labrador; about 10 p. m., the weather was so thick, and being in the vicinity of Belleisle, we were obliged to lay to for the night.

19th. About 3 a. m. the engines were set agoing and we steamed steadily on, wind ahead, and sighted a lighthouse at entrance of Straits of Belleisle. About 7 a. m. ship hoisted her colors and was answered from the lighthouse. The Royal Mail Steamer "Moravia," passed us this morning and soon disappeared; we also saw a French Steamer proceeding upwards to Quebec. We made 120 miles by the Log. This short run is accounted for by the stoppages from the fog; we passed close to several Icebergs, one in particular being very beautiful, just off Cape Norman. We passed through Belleisle Straits about 4 p. m. signalling the lighthouse as we left, and receiving a reply.

20th. We saw numerous flocks of Sea Gulls, divers and other birds, several land birds came on board, apparently driven from land by heavy gales; distance run 180 miles. Towards evening the weather became thick, wind ahead, and a considerable quantity of floating ice.

21st. A beautiful calm day with a light breeze from the N. W., sailors busy drying the summer suit of sails, stronger sails having been put on for the winter. We all combined exercise and amusement by playing at shuffle-board on deck. Distance run 202 miles since yesterday at noon. There was a prayer meeting in the forecastle in the evinging at 7 p. m., the services being conducted by one of the sailors belonging to the ship. The Captain also taking part in the proceedings, most of the passengers were present and part of the crew who could be spared from their duties. It affords food for reflection to find sailors so far away at sea not forgetting their religious duties. They are by no means the rough class of men they are represented to be. The young man who conducts these prayer meetings is not only a first-rate sailor but an exemplary man; and a sincere christian.

22nd. A good breeze blowing but rather ahead, not helping the ship much, sails set for the purpose of steadying the vessel; distance run since yesterday 200miles, nothing remarkable to record.

23rd. Distance run since yesterday 140 miles, wind and sea dead ahead, so that our progress is very slow, the sea breaking over the bows of the vessel; we are only making 5 knots per hour and the ship is labouring a great deal. We landsmen not having good sea legs find it a difficult matter to walk from one part of the vessel to another—one of my fellow passengers says that the people near Toronto think it a great deal to shoot the Lachine Rapids, but, he says, they should come here, the rapids, he says, is only a jerk or two and done with it, but here it is jerking from morning till night. 4 p. m., strong head wind; ship labouring heavy; sea breaking over her; but as the gallant St. David is a good sea going craft she keeps on her course steadily about 5 knots per hour. 8 p. m., every appearance of a stormy night with heavy sea.

24th. Clear morning; wind dead ahead, but not so strong, heavy swells, making 7 knots, passed two ships, one signaled us but distance so great signals could not be read; had divine service in the saloon at 10 a. m., conducted by Captain Scott, as the bells tolled for prayer a goodly number of the seamen, neatly dressed, came into the saloon and took their places, all the passengers who were well were also present, seeming sincere and attentive. The example set by the Captain has a good effect on the crew and passengers as well. Distance run 74 miles. This will give some idea of the sort of weather we experienced. Capt. Scott, who is one of the oldest captains in the service, says he never before experienced such a succession of heavy head winds.

25th. Wind still ahead, but not so squally; sea going down rapidly; ship steaming ahead; making 5 knots per hour; distance run 141; save at showers during the day, assisted in moderating both wind and sea.

26th, 3 a. m., aroused by the welcome and shrill sound of the Boatswain's whistle summoning the men on duty to hoist the sails, aroused and dressed myself with all the agility and despatch which could be expected from a landsman at sea; went on deck; a lovely morning, sails being rapidly set by steam power, a saving of manual labour, and time also, wind steady from N. E.; ship making 9 knots an hour. After breakfast the day being delightful the game of shuffle board began in voyage among the riddlers. The sailors are busy painting the boats and rails of the ship, as is done each voige with the double intention of adding to their durability and appearance. The log records a distance of 157 miles accomplished since 12 m. yesterday, till 12 m. to-day.

27th. Wind rather more in our favour, but still there is a heavy head sea, nothing remarkable has occured to vary the monotony of life at sea, we had another pleasant prayer meeting in the evening, conducted by the same seaman as before assisted by the captain; distance run since yesterday 180 miles.

28th. Weather similar to yesterday; wind rather more favorable; making 8 knots per hour; saw an outward bound ship, and in the evening the company's Steamer Ottawa, and exchanged signal rockets with her, they are red white and blue; in the order named, that being the distinguishing signal of the Allan line; distance made 176 miles.

29th. Splendid weather; wind rather more favorable; sighted Ireland at 11:30 a. m. and Long Lighthouse at 2:30 p. m. Saw an Irish coasting steamer and several sailing vessels, but could not signal owing to the distance being so great, saw 4 or 5 whales spouting near the vessel; distance accomplished 202 miles, 6 furlongs. Passed Instrahull, where the ill-fated Cambria was wrecked last year, when every soul was lost with the exception of one man who afterwards became insane from the hardships he endured, and severe nervous shocks he sustained. 10 p. m. passed within a very short distance of the Giants Causway, passed numerous vessels of all sizes; passed a large steamer outward bound; 11 p. m. sighted lighted Lighthouse on Mull of Kintyre.

30th.—5 a. m.—Bonnie Scotland at last in full view, passed Ailsa Craig, Ardrossan to the right, as we steamed along we passed numerous noted places; Island of Cumbra, Bute, &c., Saw the mansion where the Marquis of Bute resides when here; also Rosneath Castle, the future residence of Princess Louise, and Marquis of Lorne, and many other residences of private gentlemen and Scottish merchant Princes, the hills purple with the heather bloom, and the cultivated ground was pleasant to the eye. The beautiful green fields of root crops presenting a pleasing contrast to the purple of the heather. We anchored off Greenock about 8 a. m. and had to wait for the tide before we could proceed to Glasgow. Her Majesty's Iron Clad "Black Prince," was at anchor in the harbour, she is one of the finest and most formidable ships of war Britain possesses. I also saws several of the celebrated Clyde passenger steamers on their way to the various coast towns, crowded with passengers, sailing at the rate of 20 to 22 miles per hour. Reached Glasgow at 1 a. m. It is a ship yard on the Clyde nearly all the way from Greenock to Glasgow, there are 50 new iron steam ships building on this river this year.

Yours,

JAMES MILLAR.

The Edinburgh Review says of Russia: "Her commerce has fostered a warlike marine. Her railway system forms a net-work that enables her to concentrate her armies. Her finances are restored to a flourishing condition. And Poland has been converted, by the genius of Todtleben, into a quadrilateral, more threatening to Northern Europe than the famous Austrian quadrilateral used to be to Italy. She aspires to the hegemony of the East and affects to play the same role on that continent as her fast American ally does on this."

THE PRESIDENT of the Yale College gave the following advice to the students at that institution on Saturday:—"Young men, you are the architects of your own fortunes.—Rely on your own strength of body and soul. Take for your star, self-reliance, faith, honesty, and industry. Inscribe on your banner, 'Luck is a fool, pluck is a hero.' Don't take too much advice—keep at your helm and steer your own ship, and remember that the great art of commanding is to take a fair share of the work. Don't practice too much humanity. Think well of yourself. Strike out. Assume your own position. Put potatoes in a cart, over a rough road, and small ones go to the bottom. Rise above the envious and jealous. Fire above the mark you intend to hit. Energy, invisible determination, with a right motive, are the levers that move the world. Don't drink. Don't chew. Don't smoke. Don't swear. Don't deceive. Don't read novels. Don't marry untill you can support a wife. Be in earnest. Be self-reliant. Be generous. Be civil. Read the papers. Advertise your business. Make money, and do good with it. Love God and your fellow man. Love truth and virtue. Love your country and obey its laws.

"Evidence of the most irrefragable nature is continually accumulating which goes to prove beyond the shadow of a possibility that the rescent Indian raid upon Manitoba was in reality no Indian at all, but merely a cleverly devised plan of Riel and his confederates, who wished by this means to obtain what they lost in 1870. It had been previously shown that not until after the United States troops had scattered the invaders, and taken the greater part prisoners did the Fresh half-breeds make a movement towards offering their services to the Governor. When they were assured there there was a possibility of any trouble being occasioned benefit them, they came forward and pretended to be super-loyal to the existing authority. Governor Archibald is justly censured for being so easily gulled, and for prostituting his dignity so far as to publicly thank Riel and his followers in the Queen's name. We trust what is being revealed will open eyes of the people to what they have to content with in that new Province.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL!
Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is Thomas' Eclectric Oil, purely a preparation of six of some of the best Oils that are known, each one possess ng virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alchol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination into which they were gradually falling, have been radically cured in the largest numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Ulcers, tubercles and unhealthy states of the organs undermines the constitution, invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, and exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and it, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops one or other of its hideous forms, either on the face or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or liver, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows itself in purulent eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcers on some part of the body. Hence the necessity of exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and it, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops one or other of its hideous forms, either on the face or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or liver, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows itself in purulent eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcers on some part of the body. Hence the necessity of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is manifest, even when no active symptoms of disease exist. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, frequently, cure by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Tetter, Sore Eyes, and other eruptions of the form of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Tic, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, all the various Uterine affections of the human female system.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Disease are cured by it, though a long time is required for purifying the obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matter in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the resulting poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Enervated and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

Select Poetry.

The Old Rum Tavern Sign.

BY REV. THERON BROWN.

Yonder, close to the county road,
Stands a tavern with chimney hoar,
Blacks bats roost where the fires once glowed,
And the cracked hearts says through the rotten floor.
But there, as crusk as ever of yore.
Through morn-light merry, and midnight blind,
With arm held out to the broad highway
The tall old sign like a goblin gray
Nods and shrieks in the changing wind.

Yeep, yeep! Damnation is cheap,
Here's fun neck deep
At three pence a sin,
And sound soul-sleep—
Good fellow, come in!
Cheap, keep, deep, sleep—
For men must drink while the devil will sell,
And the jolliest road is the road to hell.

The last old loafer has spent his pelf
At the broken bar, and jockey no more
Will cool his horses and warm himself,
And chafer and chat by the mouldy door.
But there, erect as ever of yore,
Its rum-flag nailed to its storm-beat mast,
The old sign beckons with scratch and scream
Hailing footmen and turnpike team,
Day and night as they hurry past.

Yeep, yeep! &c.

Poor or rich, they never knew which.
In the tap-room yonder who swigged and swore.
Landlord Death in the drunkard's ditch
And the turf is thick o'er the topers of yore;
But their blue ghosts muster by dark, I think,
To the endless creak of the old sign's hinge,
And leap, and bustle, and crowd, and cringe

Yeep, yeep! &c.

Jack and jorum and brandy tod'
Malt devils, spirits, mandragore,
Nor any feed of the bottle god
Will riot under that gray roof more;
But the tansy grows as it grew of yore
By the wall, and the ancient sign swings
And casts its shadow in moon and sun,
And shrieks and rattles in windy fun,
And year on year the same song sings.

Yeep, yeep! &c.

Spectre gentinel, sere and stark!
Your watch is out, your order is o'er,
Turn lo, turn in. Time miss'd his mark
Or you should have tumbled long before,
And lain with your like, in the graves of yore.
Ha! what does the old sign care for that?
Nought he hears but his own shrill din
As he pipes his pass-word out and in
With the hoot and squeak of the owl and bat.

Yeep, yeep! &c.

Wooden pagan you sing too true,
For a fire-proof few of the old rum corps
Dead, but above ground yet like you,
The venom blue, down their throats pour.
And leagues from the rotton inn of yore
Pot-fools bark for your demon bell,
And tip their flip at three pence a nip,
And slobber and sip and smack their lip,
And whoop to the sound of your drunken knell.

Yeep, yeep! &c.

Ha! breathe your last, old bacchanal Past,
Where you pine and fast by your throngless door,
And your idols, swept by the thundered blast,
Their shadows cast on the day no more!
But I throw that skeleton sign of yore
Will flap and scream its iron dream,
And haunt the moon with its hoary staff,
And long the wall of its wassail laugh
Will shake from its ghostly shoulder beam.

Yeep, yeep! Damnation is cheap,
And easy and steep is the dead-rair pitch
To the bottomless deep of the drunkard's ditch.
Cheap, keep, steep, deep—
And men will drink if the devil will sell,
For the jolliest road is the road to hell!

Pink and White Tyranny.

BY MRS HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

CHAPTER VI.

HONEY-MOON, AND AFTER.

We left Mr. and Mrs. John Seymour honey-mooning. The honey-moon, dear ladies, is supposed to be the period of male subjection. The young queen is enthroned; and the first of her slaves walks obediently in her train, carries her fan, her parasol, runs her errands, packs her trunk, writes her letters, buys her anything she cries for, and is ready to do the impossible for her, on every suitable occasion.

A great strong man sometimes feels awkwardly, when thus led captive; but the greatest, strongest, and most boastful, often go most obedient under rule; for which, see Shakespeare, concerning Cleopatra, and Julius Cæsar, and Mark Antony.

But then all kingdoms, and all sway, and all authority must come to an end. Nothing lasts you see. The plain prose of life must have its turn, after the poetry and honey-moons—stretch them out to their utmost limit—have their terminus.

So, at the end of six weeks, John and Lillie, somewhat dusty and travel-worn, were received by Grace into the old family mansion at Sprindale.

Grace had read her Bible and Fenelon to such purpose, that she had accepted her cross with open arms,

Dear reader, Grace was not a severe, angular old maid sister, ready to snarl at the advent of a young beauty; but an elegant and accomplished woman, with a wide culture, a trained and disciplined mind, a charming taste, and polished manner; and above all, a through self-understanding and discipline. Though past thirty, she still had admirers and lovers; yet till now, her brother insensibly to herself, had blocked up the doorway of her heart; and the perfectness of the fraternal friendship had prevented the wish and the longing by which some fortunate man might have found and given happiness.

Grace had resolved she would love her new sister; that she would look upon all her past faults and errors with eyes of indulgence; that she would put out of her head every story she had ever heard against her, and united with her brother to make her lot a happy one.

"John is so good a man," she said to Miss Letitia Ferguson, "that I am sure Lillie cannot but be a good woman."

So Grace adorned the wedding with her presence, in an elegant Parisian dress, ordered for the occasion, and presented the young bride with a set of pearl and amethyst that were perfectly bewitching, and kisses and nots of affection had been exchanging between them; and, during various intervals, and for weeks past, Grace had been pleasently employed in preparing the family mansion to receive the new mistress.

John's bachelor apartments had been new furnished, and made into a perfect bower of roses

The rest of the house, after the usual household process of purification, had been rearranged, as John and his sister had always kept it since their mother's death in the way that she loved to see it. There was something quaint and sweet and antique about it, that suited Grace. Its unfashionable difference from the smart, flippant, stereotyped rooms of today had a charm in her eyes.

Lillie, however, surveyed the scene, the first night she took possession, with a quite determination to remodernize on the very earliest opportunity. What would Mrs. Frippit and Mrs. Nippit say to such rooms, she thought. But then there was time enough to attend to that. Not a shade of these internal reflections was visible in her manner. She said, "Oh, how sweet! How perfectly charming! How splendid!" in all proper places; and John was delighted.

She also fell into the arms of Grace, and kissed her with effusion; and John saw the sisterly union, which he had anticipated, auspiciously commencing.

The only trouble in Grace's mind was from a terrible sort if clairvoyance that seems to beast very sincere people, and makes them sensitive to the presence of anything unreal or untrue. Fair and soft and caressing as the new sister was, and determined as Grace was to believe in her, and trust her,—she found an invisible, chilly barrier between her heart and Lillie. She scolded herself, and in the effort to confide, became unnaturally demonstrative, and said and did more than was her wont to show affecoion; and yet to her own mortification, she found herself, after all, seeming to herself to be hypocritical, and professing more than she felt.

As to the fair Lillie, who as we have remarked, was no fool, she took the measure of her with that instinctive knowledge of charcter which is the essence of womanhood. Lillie was not in love with John, because that was an experience she was not capable of. But she had married him, and now considered him as her property, her subject,—hers with an intensity of ownership that should shut out all former proprietors.

We have heard much talk, of late, concerning the husband's ownership of the wife. But, dear ladies, is that any more pronounced a fact than every wife's ownership of her husband?—an owner ship so intense and pervading that it may be said to be the controlling nerve of womanhood. Let any one touch your right to the first place in your husband's regard, and see!

Well then Lillie saw at a glance just what Grace was, and what her influence with her brother must be; and also that, in order to live the life she meditated, John must act under her sway, and not under his sister's; and so the resolve had gone forth, in her mind, that Grace's dominion in the family should come to an end, and that she would, as sole empress, reconstruct the state. But, of course, she was too wise to say a word about it. "Dear me!" she said, the next morning, when Grace proposed showing her through the house and delivering up the keys, "I'm sure I don't see why you want to show things to me.—I'm nothing of a housekeepr you know all I know in what I want, and I've always had what I've wanted, you know; but you see I haven't the least idea how it's to be done, why at home I've been everybody's lady. Mamma laughs at the idea of me knowing anything.—So Grace dear, you must just be prime minister; and I'll be the good-for-nothing Queen, and just sign the papers, and all that, you know."

Grace found, the first week, that to be housekeeper to a young duchess, in an American village and with American servants was no sinecure.

The young mistress, the next week, tumbled into the wash an amount of muslin and lace and French puffing and fluting sufficient to employ two artists for two or three days, and by which honest Bridget, as she stood at her family wash-tub, was sorely perplexed.

But, in America, no woman ever dies for want of speaking her mind; and the lower orders have their turn in teaching the catechism to their superiors, which they do with an effectiveness that does credit to democracy.

"And would ye be plased to step here, Miss Saymour," said Bridget to Grace, in a voice of suppressed emotion, and pointing oratorically with her soapy right arm, to a snow-wreath of French finery and puffing on the floor. "What, I asks, Miss Grace, is, Who is to do all this? I'm sure it would take me and Katy a week, workin' day and night, let alone the cookin' and the silver and the beds and all them. It's a pity now, somebody shouldn't spake to that young crather; fur she's nothin' but a baby, and likely don't know anything, as ladies mostly don't, about what's right and proper." Bridget's Christian charity and condescension in this last sentence was some mitigation of the crisis; but still Grace was appalled. We all of us, my dear sisters, have stood appalled at the tribunal of good Bridgets rising in their majesty and declaring their ultimatum.

Bridget was a treasure in the town of Springdale, where servants were scarce and poor; and what was more, she was a treasure that knew her own worth.—Grace knew very well how she had been beset with applications and offers of higher wages to draw her to various hotels and boarding-houses, in the vicinity, but had preferred the comparative dignity and tranquility of a private gentleman's family.

But the family had been small, orderly, and systematic, and Grace the most confident of housekeepers. Still, it was not to be denied, that though an indulgent and considerate mistress, Bridget was, in fact, mistress of the Seymour mansion, and that her mind and will concerning the washing must be made known to the young queen.

It was a sore trial to speak to Lillie; but it would be sorrer to be left at once desolate in the kitchen department; and exposed to the marauding inroads of unskilled Hibernians.

In the most delicate way, Grace made Lillie acquainted with the domestic crisis as, in old times the prime minister might have carried to one of the Charleses the remonstrance and protest of the House of Commons.

"Oh! I'm sure I don't know how it's to be done," said Lillie, gayly. "Mamma always got my things done somehow. They always were done, and always must be; you just tell her so. I think it's always best to be decided with servantr. Face 'em down in the beginning,'

"But you see, Lillie, dear, it's almost impossible to get servants at all in Springdale; and such servants as ours everybody says are an exception. If we talk to Bridget in that way, she'll just go off and leave us; and then what shall we do?"

"What in the world does John want to live in such a place for?" said Lillie, peevishly. "There are plenty of servants to be got in New York; and that's the only place to live in. Well, it's no affair of mine. Tell John he married me, and must take care of me. He must settle it some way; I shan't trouble my head about it."

The idea of living in New York, and uprooting the old time-honored establishment in Springdale, struck Grace as a sort of sacrilege; yet she could not help feeling with a kind of fear, that the young mistress had power to do it.

"Don't darling, talk so, for pity's sake?" she said. "I will go to John, and will arrange it somehow."

A long consultation with faithful John, in the evening, revealed to him the perplexing nature of the material process necessary to get up his fair puff of thistle-down in all that wonderful whiteness and fancifulness of costume which had so entraced him.

Lillie cried, and said she never had any trouble before about "getting her things done." She was sure mamma or Frixie or somebody did them. With many tears and sobs, she protested her ardent desire to realize the Scriptural idea of the fowls of the air, and the lillies of the field, which were fed and clothed, "like Solomon in all his glory," without ever giving a moments care to the matter.

John kissed, and embraced, and wiped away her tears, and declared she should have everything just as she desired it, if it took half of his kingdom.

After consoling his fair one, he burst into Grace's room in the evening, just at the hour when they used to have their old brotherly and sisterly confidential talk.

"You see, Grace—poor Lillie, dear little thing—you don't know how distressed she is; and Grace, we must find some body to do up all her fol-de-rols and fizgigs for her, you know. You see, she's been used to this kind of thing; can't do without it."

"Well, I'll try to; to-morrow John," said Grace, patiently. "There is Mrs. Atkins—she is a very nice woman."

"Oh, exactly! just the thing," said John. "Yes, we'll get her to take all Lillie's things every week. That settles it."

"Do you know, John, at the prices that Mrs. Atkins asks, you will have to pay more than for all your family service together? What we have to pay this week would be twenty dollars, at the least computation; and it is worth it too—the work of getting up is elaborate."

John opened his eyes, and looked grave. Like all staple New England families, the Seymours, while they practised the broadest liberality, had instincts of great sobriety in expense. Needless profusion shocked them as out of taste; and a quiet and decent reticence in matters of self-indulgence was habitual with them.

Such a price for the fine linen of his little angel, rather staggered him, but he gulped it down.

"Well, well, Gracie," he said, "cost what it may, she must have it as she likes it. The little creature, you see, has never been accustomed to calculate or reflect in these matters; and it is trial enough to come down to our stupid way of living—so different, you know, from the gay life she has been leading."

Miss Seymour's saintship was somewhat rudely tested by this remark. That anybody should think it a sacrifice to be John's wife, and a trial to accept the homestead at Springdale, with all its tranquility and comforts—that John, under her influence, should speak of the Springdale life as stupid—was a little drop to much in her cup. A bright streak appeared in either cheek, as she said—

"Well, John, I never knew you found Springdale stupid before. I'm sure, we have been happy here,"—and her voice quavered.

"Pshaw, Gracie! you know what I mean. I don't mean that I find it stupid. I don't like the kind of rattle-brained life we've been leading this six weeks. But then it just suits Lillie; and it's so sweet and patient of her to come here, and give up all, and say not a word of regret; and then, you see, I shall be just up to my ears in business and can't give all my time to her as I have. There's ever so much law business coming on, and all the factory matters at Spindlewood; and I can see that Lille will have rather a hard time of it. You must devote yourself to her, Gracie, like a dear good soul, as you always were, and try to get her interested in our kind of life. Of course, all our set will call, and that will be something; and then—there will be some invitations out."

"Oh, yes, John! we'll manage it," said Grace, who had by this time swallowed her anger, and shouldered her cross once more with a womanly perseverance. "Oh, yes! the Fergusons, and the Wilcoxes and the Lennoxes, will all call, and we shall have picnics, and lawn teas, and musicals, and parties."

"Yes, yes, I see." said John. "Gracie, isn't she a dear little thing? Didn't she look cunning in that white wrapper this morning! How do women do those things, I wonder? said John. "Don't you think her manners are lovely?"

"They are very sweet, and she is charmingly pretty," said Grace; "and I love her dearly."

"And so affectionate! Don't you think so?" continued John. "She's all heart, and very little head. I ought not to say that either. I think she has fair natural abilities, had they been cultivated."

"My dear John," said Grace, "you forget what time it is. Good night!"

CHAPTER VII.

WILL SHE LIKE IT?

"John," said Grace, "when are you going out again to our Sunday-school at Spindlewood? They are all asking after you. Do you know it is now two months since they have seen you?"

"I know it," said John. "I am going to-morrow. You see, Gracie, I couldn't well before."

"Oh! I have told them all about it, and I have kept things up; but then there are so many who want to see you, and so many things that you alone can manage."

"Oh, yes! I'll go to-morrow," said John. "And after this, I shall be steady at it. I wonder if we could get Lillie to go," said he doubtfully.

Grace did not answer. Lillie was a subject on which it was always embarrassing to her to be appealed to. She was so afraid of appearing jealous or unappreciative; and her opinions were, so different from those of her brother, that it was rather difficult to say anything.

"Do you think she would like it, Grace?"

"Indeed, John, you must know better than I. If anybody could make her take an interest in it, it would be you."

Before his marriage, John had always the idea that pretty, affectionate little women were religious and self-denying at heart, as matters of course. No matter through what labyrinths of fashionable follies and dissipation they had been wandering, still a talent for saintship was lying dormant in their natures, which it needed only the touch of love to develop. The wings of the angel were always concealed under the fashionable attire of the belle, and would unfold themselves when the hour came. A nearer acquaintance with Lillie he was forced to confess, had not, so far, confirmed this idea. Though here was a face so fair and pure that, when he first knew her, it suggested ideas of prayer and communion with angels, yet he could not disguise from himself that, in all near acquaintance with her, she had proved to be "of the earth, earthy." She was alive and fervent about fashionable gossip,—of who is who, and what does what; she was alive to equipages, to dress, to sight-seeing, to dancing, to anything of which the whole stimulus and excitement was earthly and physical. At times, too, he remembered that she had talked a sort of pensive sentimentalism, of a slightly religious nature; but the least idea of a moral purpose in life—of self-denial, and devotion to something higher than immediate self-gratification—seemed never to have entered her head. What is more, John had found his attempts to introduce such topics with her always unsuccessful. Lillie either gaped in his face, and asked him what time it was; or playfully pulled his whiskers, asked him why he didn't take to ministry; or adroitly turned the conversation with kissing and compliments.

Sunday morning came, shining down gloriously through the dewy elm arches of Springdale. The green turf on either side of the wide streets was mottled and flecked with vivid flashes and glimmers of emerald like the sheen of changeable silk, as here and there long arrows of sunlight darted down through the leaves and touched the ground.

The gardens between the great shady houses that flanked the street were full of tall white and crimson phloxes in all the majesty of their summer bloom, and the air was filled with fragrance; and Lillie, after a two hour's toilet, came forth from her chamber fresh and lovely as the bride in the Canticles. "Thou art all fair my love; there is no spot in thee." She was killingly dressed in the rural-simplicity style. All her robes and sashes were of the purest white; and a knot of field-daises and grasses, with French dew-drops on them, twinkled in an infinitesimal bonnet one her little head, and her hair was all creped into a filmy golden aureole round her face. In short, dear reader, she was a perfectly got-up angel, and wanted only some tulle clouds and an opening heaven to have gone up at once, as similar angels do from the Parisian stage.

"You like me, don't you?" she said, as she saw the delight in John's eyes.

John was tempted to lay hold of his plaything.

"Don't now,—you'll crumble," she said, fighting him off with a dainty parasol.—"Positively you shan't touch me till after church."

John laid the little hand on his arm with pride, and looked down at her over his shoulder all the way to church. He felt proud of her. They would look at her, and see how pretty she was, he thought. And so they did. Lillie had been used to admiration in church. It was one of her fields of triumph. She had received compliments on her toilet even young clergymen, who in the course of their preaching and praying, found leisure to observe the beauties of nature and grace in their congregation She had been quite used to knowing of young men who got good seats in church simply for the purpose of seeing: consequently, going to church had not the moral advantage for her that it has for people who go simply to pray and be instructed John saw the turning of heads, and the little movements and whispers of admiration; and his heart was glad within him. The thought of her mingled with prayer and hymn; even when he closed his eyes, and bowed his head, she was there.

Perhaps this was not exactly as it should be; yet let us hope the angles look tenderly down on the sins of too much love. John felt as if he would be glad of a chance to die for her; and when he thought of her in his prayers it was because he loved her better than himself.

As to Lillie, there was an extraordinary sympathy of sentiment between them at moment. John was thinking only of her; and she was was thinking only of herself as her usual habit,—herself the one object of her life, the one idol of her love.

Not that she knew, in so many words, that she, the little frail bit of dust and ashes that she was, was her own idol, and that she appeared before her Maker, in those solemn walls, to draw to herself the homage and attention that was due to God alone; but yet it was true that for years and years, Lillie's unconfessed yet only motive for appearing in church had been the display of herself, and the winning of admiration.

But is she much worse than others!—than the clergyman who uses the pulpit and the sacred office to show off his talents!—than the singers who sing God's praises to show their voices, who intone the agonies of the Redeemer, or the glories of the Te Deum, confident on the comments of the newspaper press on their performance the next week? No; Lillie may be a little sinner, but not above others in this matter.

"Lillie," said John to her after dinner, resuming a careless, manner-of-course air, "would you like to drive with me over to Spindlewood, and see my Sunday school?"

"Your Sunday school, John? Why, bless me! do you teach Sundy school?"

"Certainly I do. Grace and I have a school of two hundred children and young people belonging to our factories. I am superintendent."

"I never heard of anything so odd!" said Lillie. "What in the world can you want to take all that trouble for,—go basking over their in the hot sun, and be shut up with a room full of those illnmell factory people! Wiy, I'm sure it can't be your duty! I wouldn't do it for the world. Nothing would tempt me. Why, gracious, John you might catch small-pox or something?"

"Pooh! Lillie, child, you don't know anything about them. They are just as cleanly and respectable as anybody."

"Oh, well! they may be. But those Irish and Germans and Swedes and Danes, and all that low classes, do smell so,—you needn't tell me, how!—that working-class smell is a thing that can't be disguised."

"But, Lillie, these are our people. They are the laborers from whose toil our wealth comes; and we owe them something."

"Well, you pay them something, don't you?"

"I mean morally. We owe our efforts to instruct their children, and to elevate and to guide them. Lillie, I feel it is wrong for us to use wealth merely as a means of self-gratification. We ought to labor for those who labor for us. We ought to deny ourselves, and make some sacrifices of ease for their good."

"You dear old preachy creature!" said Lillie "How good you must be! But, really, I haven't the smallest vocation to be a missionary,—not the smallest. I can't think of anything that would induce me to take a long, hot ride in the sun, and to sit in that stived uproom with those common creatures."

John looked grave. "Lillie," he said, "you shouldn't speak of any of your fellow-beings in that heartless way."

"Well, now, if you are going to scold me, I'm sure I don't want to go. I'm sure, if everybody that stays at home, and has comfortable times, Sundays, instead of going out on missions, is heartless, there are a good many heartless people in the world."

"I beg your pardon, my darling. I didn't mean, dear, that you were heartless, but that what you said sounded so. I knew you didn't really mean it. I didn't ask you, dear, to go to work,—only to be company for me."

"And I ask you to stay at home and be company for me. I'm sure it is lonesome enough here, and you are off on business almost all your days; and you might stay with me Sundays. You could hire some poor pious young man to do all the work over there. There are plenty of them, dear knows, that it would be a real charity to help, and that could preach and pray better than you can, I know. I don't think a man that is busy all the week ought to work Sundays. It is breaking the Sabbath."

"But, Lillie, I am interested in my Sunday-school. I know all my people, and they know me; and no one else in the world could do for them what I could."

"Well, I should think you might be interested in me: nobody else can do for me what you can, and I want you to stay with me. That's just the way with you men: you don't care anything about us after you get us."

"Now, Lillie, darling you know that isn't so."

"It's just so. You care more for your old missionary work, now, than you do for me. I'm sure I never knew I'd married a home missionary."

"Darling, please, now, don't laugh at me, and try to make me selfish and worldly. You have such power over me, you ought to be my inspiration."

"I'll be your common-sense, John.—When you get on stilts, and run benevolence into the ground, I'll pull you down. Now, I know it must be bad for a man that has as much as you to occupy his mind all the week, to go out and work Sunday; and it's foolish, when you could perfectly well hire somebody else to do it, and stay at home and have a good time."

"But, Lillie, I need it myself."

"Need it,—what for? I can't imagine."

"To keep me from becoming a mere selfish, worldly man, and fixing for mere material good and pleasure"

"You dear old Don Quixote! Well, you are altogether in the clouds above me. I can't understand a word of all that."

"Well, good-by, darling," said John, kissing her, and hastening out of the room, to cut short the interview.

Milton has described the peculiar influence of woman over man, in lowering his moral tone, and bringing him down to what he considered the peculiarly womanly level. "You women," he said to his wife, when she tried to induce him to seek favors at court by some cohession of principle,—"you women never care for anything but to be free, and to ride in your coaches." In Father Adam's description of the original Eve, he says,—

"All higher knowledge in her presence falls
Degraded: wisdom, in discourse with her,
Loses, discountenanced, and like folly shows."

Something like this effect was always produced on John's mind when he tried to settle questions relating to his higher nature with Lillie. He seemed, somehow, always to get the worst of it. All her womanly graces and fascinations, so powerful over his senses and imagination, arrayed themselves formidably against him, and for the time seemed to strike him dumb. What he believed, and believed with enthusiasm, when he was alone or with Grace, seemed to dissolve away, and be belittled, when he understood to convince her of it. Lest John should be called a mutt and a spoon for his peculiarity, we cite once more the high authority aforesaid, when Milton makes poor Adam tell the angel,—

"Yet when I approach
Her loveliness, so absolute she seems
And in herself complete, so well to know
Her own, that what she wills to do or say
Seems wisest, virtuousest, discreetest best."

John went out from Lillie's presence rather humbled and overcrowed. When the woman that a man loves laughs at his moral enthusiasms, it is like a black frost on the delicate tips of budding trees. It is up-hill work, as we all know, to battle with indolence and selfishness, and self seeking and hard-hearted worldliness. Then the highest and holiest part of our nature has a fastidiuess of its own. It is a heavenly stranger, and easily shamed. A nimble-tongued, skilful woman can so easily show the ridiculous side of what seemed heroism; and what is called common-sense, so generally, is only some neatly put phase of selfishness. Poor John needed the angel at his elbow, to give him the caution which he is represented as giving to Father Adam:—

"What transports thee so?"
An outside?—fair, no doubt, and worthy well
Thy cherishing, thy honor and thy love,
Not thy objection: Weigh her with thyself,
Then value. Oft-times nothing profits more
Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well managed: of that skill the more thou knowest,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head,
And to realities yield all her shows."

But John had an angel at his elbow.—He war a lellwo with a good heart, good as gold,—with upward aspirations, but with slow speech; and when not sympathized with, he became confused and incoherent, and even dumb. So his only way with his little pink and white empress was immediate and precipitate flight.

Lillie ran to the window when he was gone, and saw him and Grace get into the carriage together; and than she saw them drive to the old Ferguson House, and Rose Ferguson came out and got in with them.

"Well," she said to herself, "she shan't do that many times more,—I'm resolved."

No, she did not say it. It would be well for us all, if we did put into words, plain and explicit, many instinctive resolves and purposes that raise in our hearts, and which, for want of being so expressed, influence us undetected and unchallenged.—If we could say out boldly, "I don't care for, right or wrong, or good or evil, or anybody's rights or anybody's happiness, or the general good or God himself,—all I care for, or feel the less interest in, is to have a good time myself, and I mean to do it, came what may,"—we should be only expressing a feeling which often lies in the dark back-room of the human heart; and saying it might alarm us from the drugged sleep of life.

It might rouse us to shake off the slow, creeping paralysis of selfishness and sin before it is ever too late.

But Lillie was a creature who had lost the power of self knowledge. She was, my dear sir, what you suppose the true woman to be—a bundle of blind instincts; and among these the strongest was that of property in her husband, and power over him. She had lived in her power over men; it was her field of ambition. She knew them thoroughly. Woman are called ivy; and the ivy has a hundred little fingers in every inch of its length, that strike at every flaw and crack and weak place in the strong wall they mean to overgrow; and so had Lillie. She saw, at a glance, that the sober, thoughtful, Christain life of Springdale was wholly opposed to the life she wanted to lead, and in which John was to be her instrument. She saw that if such woman as Grace and Rose had power with him, she should not have; and her husband should be hers alone. He should do her will, and be her subject—so she thought, smiling at herself as she looked in the looking-glass, and then curled herself gracefully and languidly down in the corner of the sofa, and drew forth the French novel that was her usual Sunday reading.

Lillie liked French novels. There was an atmosphere of things in them that suited her. The young married woman had lovers and admirers; and there was a constant stimulus of being courted and adored, under the safe protection of a good natured "mari."

In French, the flirting is done after marriage, and the young girl loked forward to it as an introduction to a career of conquest. In america, so great is our democratic liberality, that we think of uniting the two systems. A knowledge of French is beginning to be considered as the pearl of great price, to gain which, all else must be sold. The girls must go do the French theatre and be staired at by French debauchees, who laugh at them while they pretend to understand what, thank Heaven they cannot. Then we are to have series of French novels, carefully translated, and puffed and praised even by the religious press, written by the corps of French female reformers, which still show them exactly how the naughty French woman manage their cards; so that, we shall have the latest phase of eclecticism—the union of American and French manners. The girl will flirt till twenty a la Americain, and then marry and flirt till forty a la Francaise. This was about Lillie's plan of life. Could she hope to carry it through in Springdale?

A QUESTION—Why will people keep four or five ill-looking sickly horses to do the work that one good horse might perform? If the horse had the heaves, a broken winded hip, a cough or cold, or his wind in any way affected; if his appetite is bad, or his digestive organs deranged, has a rough skin or is hide bound, we would in all cases recommend the use of Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy"—it never fails to benefit

For the Examiner

Scotland.

Land of worthies who hath bled,
For the truth and conscience sake,
Who to death like sheep were led
To the Gibbet and the stake;
Because that God's word they did sow
Faithful to their Lord's command.
'Mong the people high and low,
Broadcast through their Fatherland;
When from towns they banished were,
Because God's word they had sown;
To the Moors they did repair,
To suffer, and the church bemoan;
Sometimes did a faithful few
Seek their soverings in the Glen;
Under night the e to renew
Their trust in God, and pray for men.
Often by a soldier band,
Were they hunted like the deer;
Firm they stood with book in hand,
Praising God, tho' foes were near.
Remembrance of them ne'er shall rot,
Men who bought our liberty;
Less honor give to them than Scott?
They did for Scotland more than be.
I think I hear each Scotchman say,
The Worthies' names shall never rot;
Their Works shall last eternity.
But not so with the works of Scot.
'Twas they who the foundation laid,
Who set the sons of Scotia free:
Death sufferings made them not afraid,
For to gain conscience liberty.
They fought and gained Scots' liberty.

The Kingston correspondent of the Ottawa Free Press says: The Whig has been sold to Dr. Barker's grandson, and is to come out as a Reform paper. The editor gets $3,000 from the Reform party.

Judge Morrison, at the Welland Assizes, announced to Mr. Mayor, publisher of the St., Catherines Times, that at the next assizes to be held in St. Catherines, a sentence of imprisonment would be passed upon him libelling Mr. S Burns, mayor of that town.

A. W. Lauder unseated!—This notorious martyr, who was elected to represent South Grey in the Ontario Legislature, has been unseated. On Wednesday, Vice-Chancellor Mowat declared Lauder's election void on the ground of bribery, and ordered him to pay the costs of the trail. Splendid! One vote less for John Sandfield!!

After war, pestilence and intemperance—colds lead to the greatest destruction of human life, mainly, because it is considered by many to be of no consquence and hence systematically neglected, until a simple, curable disease, is converted into a fatal pulmonary one. Every one troubled with what is called a slight cold or cough, should immediately use Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers—they allay irritation at once, and exert a most beneficial influence on all the Bronchial and pulmonary organs. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per box.

NEW SHEEP DISEASE—Wm. Tindall, Esq., "the Nichol Shepherd," informs us that his sheep caught a disease at the Guelph Central Exhibition which is entirely new to him—It is an effection of the eyes. On the disease first setting in the sheep takes a running at the eyes, and keeps winking continually. In about six days afterwards a white scam gathers over the eyes, and the affected animal go stone blind for a few days—In Mr. Tindall's sheep the blindness disappeared and the eyes healed up without any further care and attention in feeding, but when the disease first broke out Mr. T. was greately alarmed.

Murderer Released.—The villian McGarry whome old residents of this neighbourhood will remember some years ago the son of Harvey Hull, Esq., in a most brutal manner in Garafraxa, has been pardoned and released from the Penitentiary. This act by Sir John A McDonald, the minister of Justice, will stir up a feeling of the most unconrollable indignation in the locality. McGarry was one of the greatest scoundrels ever lived, and he does not seem to have improved much while in Penitentiary, for the first thing we hear of him after getting out, is that we hear he has been robbed in Detroit. If he had been in good company he would not have been robbed. He had better keep a safe distance form the County of Wellington.—Ex.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL!
Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combination thus. Thus in the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alchol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

Montreal and Toronto show a good sample of dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.

He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a safe guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.

The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.

I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as strangers, to the inspection of my furs, which are not represented under fictitious names.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfelt tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Fits, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Uterine affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilitic or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from its rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

"At the Last"

The following beautiful poem was written upon the passage "Man goeth forth unto his work, and to his labour until the evening."

The stream is calmest when it nears the tide,
And flowers are sweetest at the eventide,
And birds more musical at the close of day,
And saints divinest when they pass away.

Morning is lovely, but a holier charm
And Weary man must ever love her best,
For Morning calls to toil, but night to rest,

She came from Heaven, and on her wings doth bear
A holy fragrance, like the breath of prayer
Footsteps of angels follow in her train,
To shut the weary eyes of Day in peace.

All things are hush'd before her as she throws
O'er earth and sky her mantle of repose;
There is a calm a beauty, and a power
That Morning knows not, in the evening hour.

"Until the evening" we must weep and toil,
Plow like a stern furrow, dig the weedy soil,
Tread with sad feet our rough and thorny way,
And bear the heat and burden of the day.

O! when our sun is setting may we glide,
Like summer evening down the golden tide,
And leave behind us we pass away
Sweet, starry twilight around our sleeping clay!

CHAPTER VIII.

SPINDLEWOOD.

It seemed like old times to Grace, to be once more going with Rose and John over the pretty road to Spindlewood.

John did not reflect upon how little she saw now of him, and how much of a trial the separation was; but he noticed how bright and almost gay she was, when they were by themselves once more. He was gay too. In the congenial atmosphere of sympathy, his confidence in himself, and his own right in the lit the controversy that had occurred, returned. Not that he said a word of it; he did not do so, and would not have done so for the world. Grace and Rose were full of anecdotes of this, that, and the other of their scholars; and all the particulars of some of their new movements were discussed. The people had, of their own accord, raised a subscription for a library, which was to be presented to John that day, with a request that he would select the books.

"Gracie, that must be your work," said John; "you know I shall have an important case next week."

"Oh yes! Rose and I will settle it," said Grace. "Rose, we'll get the catalogues from all the book stores, and mark the things."

"We'll want books for the children just beginning to read; and then books for the young men in John's Bible-class, and all the way between," said Rose. "It will be quite a work to select."

"And then to bargain with the book stores, and make the money go far as possible," said Grace

"And then there'll be the covering of the books," said Rose. "I'll tell you. I think I'll manage to have a lawn tea at our house; and the girls will come early, and get the books covered—that'll be charming."

"I think Lillie would like that," said John.

"I should be so glad," said Rose. "What a lovely little thing she is! I hope she'll like it. I wanted to get up something pretty for her. I think, at this time of year, lawn teas are a little variety."

"Oh! she'll like it, of course," said John, with some sinking as heart about the Sunday school books.

There were so many pressing to shake hands with John, and congratulate him, so many histories to tell, so many cases presented for consultation, that it was quite late before they got away; and tea had been waiting for them more than an hour when they returned.

Lillie looked pensive, and had that indescribable air of patient martyrdom which some women know how to make so very effective. Lillie had a good general knowledge of the science of martyrdom—a little spice and flavor of it had been gently infused at times into her demeanor ever since she had been at Springdale. She could do the uncomplaining sufferer with the happiest effect. She contrived to insinuate at times how she didn't complain—how dull and slow she found her life, and yet how she endeavored to be cheerful.

"I know," she said to John when they were by themselves, "that you and Grace both think I'm a horrid creature."

"Why, no, dearest; indeed we don't."

"But you do, though; oh I feel it! The fact is, John, I haven't a particle of constitution; and if I should go on as Grace does it would kill me in a month. Ma never would let me do anything; and if I did, I was sure to break all down under it; but, if you say so, I'll try to go into this school."

"Oh, no, Lillie! I don't want you to go in. I know, darling, you could not stand any fatigue I only wanted you to take an interest—just to go and see for my sake."

"Well, John, if you must go, and must keep it up, I must try to go. I'll go with you next Sunday. It will make my head ache, perhaps; but, no matter if you wish it. You don't think badly of me do you?" she said coaxingly; playing with his whiskers.

"No, darling; not the least."

"I suppose it would have been a great deal better for you if you had married a strong, energetic woman, like your sister I do admire her so; but it discourages me."

"Darling, I'd a thousand times rather have you what you are," said John; for—

"What she wills to do
Seems wisest, virtuousest, discreetest, best."

"O John! come, you ought to be sincere."

"Sincere, Lillie! I am sincere.

"You really would rather have poor, poor little me than a woman like Grace, a great, strong, energetic woman?' And Lillie laid her soft cheek down on his arm in pensive humility.

"Yes, a thousand million times," said John in his enthusiasm, catching her in his arms and kissing her. "I wouldn't for the world have you any thing but the darling little Lillie that you are. I love your faults more than the virtues of other women. You are a thousand times better than I am. I am a great coarse blockhead, compared to you. I hope I didn't hurt your feelings this noon; you know, Lillie, I'm hasty, and apt to be inconsiderate. I don't really know that I ought to let you go over next Sunday."

"Oh John, you are so good! Certainly if you go I ought to; and I shall try my best." Then John told her all about the books and the lawn tea, and Lillie listened approvingly.

So they had a lawn tea at the Fergussons that week, where Lillie was the cynosure of all eyes. Mr. Mathews, the young clergyman of Springdale was there. Mr. Mathews had been credited as one of those lurirers of Rose Fergusson; but on this occasion he prumenaded and talked with Lillie alone, with an exclusive devotion.

"What a lovely young creature your new sister!" he said to Grace. "She seems to have so much religious sensibility."

"I say, Lillie," said John, "Mathews seems to be smitten with you. I had a notion of interfering."

"Did you ever see anything like it, John? I couldn't shake the creature off. I was so thankful when you came up and took me. He's Rose's admirer, and he hardly spoke a word to her. I think it's shameful."

The next Sunday Lillie rode over to Spindlewood with John, Rose and Mr. Mathews.

Fever had the picturesque of religion received more lustre than from her presence. John was delighted to see how they all gazed at her and wondered. Lillie looked like a fine-toned Pre-Raphaelite ture of the youthful Madonna,—white pure, and patient. The day was hot and the hall crowded; and John noticed what he never did before, the close smell and confined air, and it made him uneasy. When we are feeling with the nerves of some else, we notice the roughness and inconvenience. John thought he never saw his school appear so little to advantage. Yet Lillie was an image of patient endurance, trying to be pleased, and John thought her, as she sat and did nothing, more of a saint than Rose and Grace, who were laboriously sorting books, and gathering around their large classes of factory boys, to whom they talked with an exhausting devotedness.

When all was over, Lillie sat back on the carriage cushions, and smelled at her gold vinaigrette.

"You are all worn out, dear," said John, tenderly.

"It's no matter," she said faintly.

"Lillie, darling! does you head ache?"

"A little, you know it was close in there. I'm very sensitive to such. I don't think they effect others as they do me," said Lillie, with the voice of a dying zephyr.

"Lillie, it is not your duty to go," said John; you are too precious to be risked."

"How can you say so, John? I'm a poor little creature, no use to anybody."

Hereupon John told her that her only use in life was to be lovely to be lovely and to be loved—that a thing of beauty was a joy forever, &c., &c. But Lillie was too much exhausted, on her return, to appear at the tea-table. She took to her bed at once with sick headache, to the poignant remorse of John. "You see how it is, Gracie," he said. "Poor dear little thing, she is willing enough, but there's nothing of her. We must'n allow her to exert herself; her feelings always carry her away."

The next Sunday, John sat at home with Lillie, who found herself too unwell to go to church, and was in a state of such low spirits as to require constant soothing to keep her quiet.

"It is fortunate that I have you and Rose to trust the school with," said John; "you see, it's my first duty to take care of Lillie."

CHAPTER IX.

A CRISIS.

One of the shrewdest and most subtle modern French writers has given his views of womankind in the following passage:—

"There are few women who have not found themselves, at least once in their lives, in regard to some incontestable fact, faced down by precise, keen, searching enquiry,—one of those questions pitilessly put by their husbands, the very idea of which enters the heart like a stroke of a dagger. Hence comes the maxim, Every woman lies—obliging lies—venal lies—sublime lies—horrible lies—but always the obligation of lying.

"This obligation once admitted, must it not be a necessity to know how to lie well? In France, the women lie admirably. Our customs instruct them so well in imposture. And woman is so naively impertinent, so pretty, so graceful, so true in her lying! They so well understand its usefulness in social life for avoiding those violent shocks would destroy happiness,—it is like the cotton in which they pack their jewelry.

"Lying is to them the very foundation of language, and truth is only the exception; they speak it, as they are virtuous, from caprice or for a purpose. According to their character, some women laugh when they lie, and some cry; some become grave, and others get angry. Having begun life by pretending perfect insensible to that homage which flatters them most, they often finish by lying even to themselves. Who has not admired their apparent superstition and at a moment when they are trembling for the mysterious treasures of their love! Who has not studied their ease and facility, their presence of mind in the midst of the most critical embarrassments of social life! There is nothing awkward about it; their deception flows as softly as the snow falls from heaven.

"Yet there are men who have the presumption to expect to get the better of the Prussian woman!—of the woman who possesses thirty-seven thousand ways of saying 'No,' and incommensurable variations in saying 'Yes.'"

This is a Frenchman's view of life in a country where women are trained more systematically for the mere purpose of attraction than in any other country, and where the pursuit of admiration and the excitement of winning lovers are represented by its authors as constituting the main staple of woman's existence. France, unfortunately, is becoming the great society-teacher of the world.—What with French operas, French novels, and the universal rush of American women for travels, France is becoming so powerful on American fashionable society, that the things said of the Parisian women begin in some cases to apply to some women in America.

Lillie was as precisely a woman here described as if she described if she had been born and bred in Paris. She had all the thirty-seven thousand ways of saying "No," and the incommensurable variations in saying "Yes," as completely as the best French teaching could have given it. She possessed, and had used, all that graceful facility, in the story of herself that she had told John in the days of courtship. Her power over him was based on a dangerous foundation of unreality. Hence, during the first few weeks of her wedding life, came a critical scene, in which she was brought in collision with one of those "pitiless questions" our athor speaks of.

Her wedding presents, manifold and brilliant, had remained at home, in the charge of her mother, during that wedding journey. One bright day, a few weeks after her arrival in Springdale, the boxes containing the treasures were landed there; and John, with all enthusiasm, busied himself with the work of unpacking these boxes, and drawing forth these treasures.

Now, it so happened that Lillie's maternal grandfather, a nice, pious old gentleman, had taken the occasion to make her the edifying and suggestive present of a large, elegantly family Bible.

The binding was unexceptionable; and Lillie assigned it a proper place of honor among her wedding-gear. Alas! she had not looked into it, nor see what danger to her power were lodged between its leaves.

But John who was curious in the matter of books, sat quietly down in a corner to examine it; and on the middle page, under the head "Family Record," he found in a large, bold hand, the date of the birth of "Lillie Ellis" in figures of the most uncompromising plainness; and thence, with one flash of his well-trained arithmetical sense came the perception that, instead of being twenty years old, she was in fact twenty-seven,—and that of course she had lied to him.

It was a horrid and a hard word for an American young man to have suggested in relation to his wife. If we may believe the French romancier, a Frenchman would simply have smiled in amusement on detecting this petty feminine ruse of his beloved. But American men are in the habit of expecting the truth from respectable women as a matter of course, and the want of it in the smallest degree strikes them as shocking. Only an Englishman or an American can understand the dreadful pain of that discovery to John.

The Anglo-Saxon race have, so to speak, a worship of truth; and they hate and abhor lying with an energy which leaves no power of tolerance.

The Celtic races have a certain sympathy with deception. They have a certain appreciation of the value of lying as a fine art, which has never been more skilfully shown than in the passage from De lying so sweetly and skilfully is represented as one of those women "qui ont je ne sais quoi de saint et de sacre, qui inspirent tant de respect que l'amour,"—"a woman who has an indescribable something of holiness a purity which inspires respect as well as love." It was no detraction from the character of Jesus, according to the estimate of Renan, to represent him as consenting to a benevolent fraud, and seeming to work miracles, when he did not work them by way of increasing his good influence over the multitude.

But John was the offspring of a generation of men for hundreds of years, who would any of them have gone to the stake rather than have told the smallest untruth: and for him who had been watched and guarded and catechised against this sin from his cradle, till he was as true and pure as a crystal rock, to have his faith shattered in the woman he loved was a terrible thing.

As he read the fatal figures a mist swam before his eyes,—a sort of faintness came over him. It seemed for a moment as if his very life was sinking down through his boots into the carpet. He threw down the book hastily, and, turning, stepped through an open window into the garden, and walked quickly off.

"Where in the world is John going?" said Lillie, running to the door, and calling after him in imperative tones.

"John, John, come back. I haven't done with you yet;" but John never turned his head.

"How very odd! what in the world is the matter with him?" she said to herself.

John was gone all the afternoon. He took a long, long walk, all by himself, and thought the matter over. He remembered that fresh, childlike, almost infantine face, that looked up into his face with such a bewitching air of frankness and candor, as she professed to be telling all about herself and her history; and now which or what of it was true? It seemed as if he loathed her; and yet he couldn't help having her, while he despised himself for doing it.

When he came home to supper he was silent and morose. Lillie came running to meet him; but he threw her off, saying he was tire. She was frightened; she had never seen him look like that.

"John, what is the matter with you?" said Grace at the tea-table. "You are upsetting everything, and don't drink your tea."

"Nothing—onld—I have some trouble some business to settle," he said, getting up to go out again. "You needn't wait for me; I shall be out late."

"What can be the matter?"

Lillie indeed had not the remotest idea. Yet she remembered his jumping up suddenly, and throwing down the Bible; and mechanically she went to it, and opened it. She turned it over; and the record met her eye.

"Provoking!" she said. "Stupid old creature! must needs go and put that out in full." Lillie took a paper-folder, and cut the leaf out quite neatly; then folded and burned it.

She knew not what was the matter. John was angry with her; but she could not help wondering that he should be so angry. If he had laughed at her, teased her, taxed her with the trick, she would have understood what to do. But this was terrible gloom, this awful commotion of the elements frightened her.

She went to her room saying that she had a headache, and would go to bed. But she did not. She took her French novel, and read till she heard him coming; and then she threw down the book and began to cry. He came into the room, and saw her leaning like a little white snow-wreath over the table, sobbing as if her heart would break. To do her justice, Lillie's sobs were not affected. She was lonesome and thoroughly frightened; and, when she heard him coming, her nerves gave out John's heart yearned towards her. His short-lived anger had burned out; and he was perfectly longing for a reconciliation. He felt as if he must have her to love, no matter what she was. He came up to her and stroked her hair. "O Lillie!" he said, "why couldn't you have told me the truth? What made you deceive me?"

"I was afraid you wouldn't like me if I did," said Lillie, in her sobs.

"O Lillie! I should have liked you no matter how you were—only you should have told me the truth.'

"I know it—I know it—oh, it was wrong of me!" and Lillie sobbed, and seemed in danger of falling into convulsions, and John's heart gave out. He gathered her in his arms. "I can't help loving you; and I can't live without you," he said, "be you what you may!"

Lillies heart beat with triumph under all her sobs; she had got him, and should hold him yet.

"There can be no confidence between husband and wife, Lillie," said John, gravely, "unless we are perfectly true to each other." Promise me, dear, that you will never deceive me again."

Lillie promised with ready fervor. "O John," she said, "I never should have done so when I had only come under your influence earlier. The fact is, I have been under the worst influences all my life. I never had anybody like you to guide me."

John may of course be excused for telling that his flattering little penitent was more to him than ever; and as to Lillie, she gave a sigh of relief. That was over anyway, and she had him not only safe, but more completely her's than before.

A generous man is entirely unnerved by a frank confession. If Lillie had said one word in defence, if she had raised the slightest shadow of argument, John would have roused up all his moral principle to oppose her; but this poor little white water-sprite, dissolving in a rain of penitent tears, quite washed away all his anger and all his heroism.

The next morning, Lillie, all fresh in a ravishing toilet, with fielddaisies in her hair, was in a condition to laugh gently at John for his emotion of yesterday. She triumphed softly, not too obviously, in her power. He couldn't do without her,—do what she might,—that was plain.

"Now, John," she said, "don't you think we poor women are judged rather hardly? Men, you know, tell all sorts of lies to carry on their great politics and their ambition, and nobody thinks it so dreadful of them.

"I do—I should," interposed John.

"Oh, well! you—you are an exception. It is not one man in a hundred that is so good as you are. Now, we women have only one poor little ambition,—to be pretty, to please you men; and as soon as you know we are getting old, you don't like us. And can you think it's very shocking if we don't come square up to the dreadful truth about our age? Youth and beauty is all there is to us you know."

"Oh Lillie! don't say so," said John, who felt the necessity of being instructive, and of improving the occasion to elevate the moral tone of his little elf. Goodness lasts, my dear, when beauty fades." "Oh, nonsense! Now, John, dont talk humbug. I'd like to see you following goodness when beauty is gone. I've known lots of vain old maids that were perfect saints and angels; yet men crowded and jostled by them to get the pretty sinners. I dare say "now," she added, with a bewitching look over her shoulder at him, "you'd rather have me than Miss Almira Carraway—hadn't you now?"

And Lillie put her white arm round his neck, and her downy cheek on his, and said archly, "Come, now, confess."

Then John told her she was a bad, naughty girl; and she laughed; and on the whole, the pair were more hilarious and loving than usual.

But yet, when John was away at his office, he thought of it again, and found there was still a sore spot in his heart

She had cheated him once; would she cheat him a new? And she could cheat so prettily, so serenely, and with such a candid face, it was a dangerous talent.

No: she wasn't like his mother, he thought with a sigh. The "je de saint et de sacre," which had so captivated his imagination, did not cover the saintly and sacred nature; it was a mere outward purity of complexion and outline. And then Grace—she must not be left to find out what he knew about Lillie. He had told Grace that she was only twenty—told it on her authority and now must become an accomplice! If called on to speak of his wife's age, must he accommodate the truth to her story, or must he falter and evade! Here was another brick laid on the wall of separation between his sister and himself. It was rising daily. Here was another subject on which he could never speak frankly with Grace: for he must defend Lillie—every impulse of his heart rushed to protect her.

But it is a terrible truth, and one that will not hurt any of us to bear in mind, that our judgments of our friends are involuntary.

We may long with all our hearts to confide; we may be fascinated, entangled, and wish to be blinded; but blind we cannot be. The friend that has lied to us once, we may long to believe; but we cannot. Nay, more; it is the worse for us, if, in our desire to hold the deceiver in our hearts, we begin to chip and hammer on the great foundations of right and honor, and to say within ourselves, "After all, why be so particular?" Then, when we have searched about for all the reasons and apologies and extenuations for wrong doing, are we sure that in our human weakness we shall not be pulling down the moral barriers in ourselves? The habit of excusing evil, and finding apologies, and wishing to stand with one who stands on a lower moral plane, is not a wholesome one for the soul.

As fate would have it, the very next day after this took some, who should walk in to the parlor where Lillie, John and Grace were sitting, but that terror of American democracy, the census taker. Armed with the whole power of the Republic, this official soon with elegant ease into the most sacred privacies of the family. Flirtations and denials are in vain. Bridget and Katy and Annie, no less than Seraphina and Isabella, must give up the critical secrets of their lives.

John took the paper into the kitchen Honest old Bridget gave in her age with effrontery as "twinty five." Annie giggled and flounced, and declared on her word she didn't know—they could put it down as they liked. But, Annie, you must tell, or you may be sent to jail, you know."

Annie giggled still harder, and tossed her head: "Then it's to jail I'll go; for I don't know."

"Dear me," said Lillie, with an air of edifying candor, "what a fuss they make! Set down my age 'twenty-seven.' John," she added."

Grace started, and looked at John; he met her eye, and blushed to the roots of his hair.

"Why, what's the matter said Lillie, are you embarrassed at telling your age?"

"Oh, nothing!" said John, writing down the numbers hastily; and then, finding a sudden occasion to give directions in the garden, he darted out. It's so silly to be ashamed of our age! said Lillie, as the census-taker withdrew.

"Of course," said Grace; and she had the humanity never to allude to the subject with her brother.

THE CENSUS.—Although the census returns are still shrouded in the conglomerated cobwebs of Dunkinism, we are in position to say that they will carry disappointment to many who reckoned somewhat too sanguinely on Canada's growth. The increase of population within the last decade will prove to be between 450,000 souls, a sad comedown from the glorious calculations of a million. Ontario of course, leads the van, and yet we need only count on about six new representatives by her increase. The public may rely upon these meagure figures as thoroughly trustworthy. They show, so far as they go, that we have been somewhat too confident in our decennial progression. This habit of overshooting the make in census matters is an epidemic. Our cousins across the lake reckoned on several million more than returns showed, and individual cities went to the most extravagant lengths. We have fallen for the once into a similar mistake. We trust that we shall be able to lay the full returns before our readers at a very early day. The Statistic Department seems inclined to brake the disappointing figures upon us very gently, but we can assure Mr. Pope that sudden dissapointment is preferable to dreary waiting.—Telegraph.

Until the discovery of Fellows Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites, the use of Cod Liver Oil was very general in the treatment of Consumption and other wasting diseases, but its employment has been to a very great extent discontinued wherever the Syrup is introduced.

It is found that all the advantages obtained from the Oil are possessed by the Syrup, without the drawback of unpleasant taste, eructations of digestion gas and nausea which frequently follow the use of Oil.

Fellows, Hypophosphites is most agreeable to the palate. It assists digestion and assimilation, so that any healthy diet is made to sustain the system under trying circumstances. It not only increases the muscular power of the stomach, but Chyle and good Blood are readily formed by its peculiar action on the food, making the process of digestion more comfortable and the body stronger to overcome disease.

Consumption, so prevalent and so fatal, is dreaded as the great scourge of our race, and yet in the formative stages, all pulmonary complaints may be readily controlled by using "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers." They relieve the worst cough in a few minutes, and have the most beneficial influence to the bronchical and pulmonary organs—but they must be used in time. Public speakers and singers will also derive great benefit by using them. Sold by all druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per box.

GENIUS AND LABOR.—Alexander Hamilton once said to an intimate friend: "Men give me some credit for genius—but all the genius I have lies just in this—when I have a subject in hand, I study it profoundly, and day and night it is before me—I explore it in all its bearings, and my mind becomes pervaded with it." Now a great deal of study has been bestowed upon the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" to make it what it is—the first of pain removing agents, and the best medicine for the cure of colds, coughs rheumatism, neuralgia, summer complaints, &c. Sold by all Druggists and medicine dealers. Price 25 cents per bottle

Canadian Pacific Railway.

The following interesting information concerning Sir Waddington's proposed route for the Canadian Interoceanic Railway, and the character of the country it penetrates, compiled from a lengthy report recently published by that gentleman.

LENGTH OF THE PROPOSED ROUTE.

	Miles.
From Montreal to Ottawa,	115.
" Ottawa to the Mattawah	195.
" the Mattawa to Fort Garry	994
" Fort Garry to the Yellow Head Pass	865
Thence to the limit of British Columbia	54
Route by the Upper Fraser (British Columbia) by "short cut"	445

Total length from Montreal to the Pacific 2,177.
Against 3,305 miles from New York to San Francisco, or 288 miles less.

The distance given in the pamphlet are greatentthan these. In the first place, because no allowance was made for the proposed short cut in British Columbia, which, in all probability, can be realized; and secondly, because they are only rough calculated and rather exaggerated.

CLASS OF LAND.

The above distance may also be classed in three categories as regards the nature of the soil and the country traversed, viz:—1. Level; rich arable country; 2. Rolling country, less fertile; 3. Poor, mountainous and timbered, in the following proportions—Valley of the Ottawa, 70 miles, rolling. Montreal Valley 89 miles, level; Clay Level Country, 250 miles, level; Laurentides north of of Lake Superior, 20 miles, level; Neepigon and Clack Surgeon district, 44 miles, level; Height of Land to White Mouth River, 375 miles, passes Great Western Plain, 1,042 miles level; Great Western Plain, approach to Rocky Mountains, 25 miles rolling; Valley of the Assiniboine, 30 miles rolling; Rocky Mountains to the Cache, 80 miles, pass; Bald or Gold Range beyond, 110 miles, pass along Bute-efly Lake and River, 209 miles rolling; Rhodesian Range (the valley well fertile), 84 miles, poor; being a total of 1,544 miles, country, 200 of rolling, and 723 of poor.

Recapitulation.—Rich and cultivable territory, 1,744 miles; grazing, timbered, and mountainous, 733 miles: total, 2,468.

EXTENSION TO VANCOUVER ISLAND

Since writing the above pamphlets, it has been ascertained that by constructing suspension railroad bridge over three straits between the mainland and Stuart Island Stuart and Valdes Islands, and Valdes and Vancouver Islands, the railway can be eventually continued down the west side of Bute Inlet and across Vancouver Island, either to the head of Lyngnet Sound or to Albernt Canal at the head of Barclay Sound; or to Esquimalt Harbor, near Victoria. By this means all the inconveniences of an intermediate terminus, and the expense, trouble and delay of transhipment across the Gulf of Georgia, which as compared with San Francisco, would render the road practically useless for commercial purposes, are avoided; and secondly (this is more important in an imperial point of view), a continuous and permanent communication with the mainland is established at a point offering the greatest strategical security, and which would be impregnable; thus dispensing absolute necessity of passing before the disputed island of San Juan, and very much diminishing the importance of that vexed question. With such weighty motives to carry out the scheme, it becomes interesting to know that would be the probable outlay. The following approximate calculations show it to be enormous; such considerable undertakings must therefore, necessarily be deferred though it points to the advisability of carrying the road to Bute Inlet, apart from other weighty considerations.

Three lines are available, of which the following would be the estimated cost:

Tahsish Arm, Kempton Sound, 193 miles, £8. 665.000; to Shamp Harbor, Albernt Canal, 164 miles, £3 278,750; to Esquimalt Harbor, Victoria. 284 miles, £5,940,750.

Cleanings.

To a moderately refined mind, the waving of the popular, the flight of the starling, the sweep of the clouds, the progress of the trees and flower, the running of a stream, afford more to dwell upon and enjoy, more to soothe the mind and suggest that in which real rest is possible than all the monotonous hum of daily existence.—Spectator.

We hope the fashion of drinking those wines as beverages, which obtained a generation ago, has nearly, if not wholly, died out in England. As a liquor after dinner, they perhaps do not so much harm, if they are bought from a safe wine-merchant; bottled cherry, at lunch and and at dinner, during his stay by the seaside, may have at the expiry of a week, to return suitedly to town for the benefit of his health.—Daily News.

Who can describe what subtle influence float, to our brains, and unlock the folded door of memory with the smell of flowers, making the world seem different to us, and yet touching us so gently that often we never consciously recognise what has caused the happy emotion or brought forth the tender remembrance? To the hardest and coldest, and most careworn amongst us, flowers are still something good. We are all a little, if only a little, the happier because in this vast grinding city our once bare and colorless barks are plan ei with tulips, verbenas, and transformed into state ly gardes, and even our streets are decked and made fragrant with the balconies full of stocks and mignonnette and heliotrope—wherever flowers exist they do something to cheer and mend the place.—Echo.

KEEP STRAIGHT AHEAD.—Pay no attention to slanders or gossip-mongers. Keep straight on in your course, and let their backbiting die the death of neglect. What is the use of having awake nights brooding over the remarks of some false friend, that runs through your brain like forked lightening? What's the use of getting into a worry and fret over gossip that has been set afloat to pour dead vinitage by some meddlesome busybody, who has more tong character. These things cannot possibly injure you, unless indeed, you take notice of them, and in combating them give them character and standing. If what is said about you is true, set your self right at once; if it is false, let it go for what it will fetch. If a bee stings you, would you go to the hive and destroy it?—Would not a thousand come upon you?—It is wisdom to say little re-petting the injuries you have received. We are generally losers in the end if we stop to refute all the backbitings and gossippings we may hear by the way. They are annoying, it is true, but not dangerous so long as we do not stop to expostulate and scold. Our character are formed and sustained by ourselves, and by our own actions and purposes, and not by others. Let us always bear in mind that "calumniators may usually be trusted to time, and the slow but steady justice of public opinion."

HOW TO MAKE MONEY.—A horse dealer residing in the vicinity of Keyport, N. J., and who buys up horses for the New York market, purchases Darley's Canadian Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy by the dozen and feeds it to his horses; he says it is superior to anything he has ever used as a condition medicine, that the horses are so much more improved by its use as to sell more readily and command higher prices. Two other horse dealers, and residing at Huntington, the other at Glen Cove, L. I., also

OYSTER FESTIVAL.—We invite attention to the Oyster Festival in the Music Hall, on Monday evening. The proceeds will be in aid of the church parsonage fund.

We understand full arrangements are now perfected for re-opening the Cobourg and Peterboro Railway to Peterboro. Mr. Fowler having the contract. We expected to have full particulars but they did not reach in time.

ONTARIO DRUG STORE.—We invite attention to the advertisement of the Ontario Drug Store in another column. Mr. Johnstone is prepared to furnish everything kept in a first-class drug Establishment.

A man named Maurice Cashman was sent to jail on Monday, for stealing a pair blankets from the dry goods store of Messrs. Green & Fowler.

The Kingston News says the Government is preparing for a new supply of silver. It is very much needed. It is almost impossible to carry on trade at present from the impossibility of making change.

The Government Organs openly avow the intention of the unseated candidates to vote for the speaker and on the address. Surely the gentlemen themselves will have a deeper sense of right and consistency than the organs have.

LECTURE.—J. B. Dixon Esq., M. A., will lecture, under the auspices of the Mechanics Institute, a week from Thursday, of which more full information will be given. We are glad that the directors have induced him to give another of his popular lectures, and we bespeak a full house.

OFF THE TRACK.—The train to Lakefield suffered a little smash up yesterday morning, a little above the old Nassau Mills. Four cars laden with lumber were dashed off the track and badly broken, the lumber being scattered everywhere. The Locomotive and tender got free and received no damage. The cars in the rear received a little shaking only: no one hurt.

ST ANDREWS SOCIETY.—The Anniversary Sermon of this Society will be preached by the Rev. K. McLennan, in the Canada Presbyterian Church, on Sunday the 26th Nov., at 6. 30 P M. Members will celebrate St. Andrews day by a supper at Caisse's Hotel. Tickets may be obtained by members, from the secretary T. W. Nisbett or at the stores of John Berram and J. R. Ormond.

Lee who was sentenced to be hung in Montreal was executed on Friday last. After, or about the time of his sentence he became a convert to Catholicism and died in that faith. He was interred in the Roman Catholic burying ground. There are severe criticisms on this, as he was a murderer, while Guiboird whose remains were not permitted to rest in the sacred soil, was a respectable citizen and a Catholic also, but one who refused to follow the teaching of his Clergy in secular things.

The stone work for the new bridge, over the Otonabee is completed, we understand the work of preparing the iron is also progressing; but we believe the contactors cannot complete the work by January. The committee delayed too long before letting the work, and the unfavorable weather from this to January must prove a hindrance to the workmen. We feel satisfied, however, that they will do their utmost to have the work completed at the time agreed, but under the circumstances it will be next to impossible.

Wood, Is $7.50 a cord in Toronto.

In Peterborough cord wood is now bringing $3 to $3.50 a load, and to examine the loads they appear little over half a cord. The sellers understand the law of fixing their loads to contain the smallest possible quantity. They are generally three feet, or so, at the bottom, and fourteen to eighteen inches at the top.

Straw is selling at four dollars for a little lock on a waggon, about $20 a ton, if weighed. Hay is still $16 to $20 a, ton according to demand on Wednesday last, it brought $24.

Geese and Turkeys vary in price according to quality.

THEIR ONLY HOPE.—The Combination press is discussing the right of those candidates who have lost their seats to vote for the speaker. One of their arguments is that no returns can be made to the House until a speaker be elected, and that consequently the defeated candidates have no knowledge of their being unseated. This is a new way of reasoning, and may suit those who are more desirous of retaining office than hiding their own inconsistency. Mr. Lauder must be obtuse indeed, if he does not know he has been unseated for bribery and other undue influences, although he was present when the Judge declared him liable to pay the whole costs. Those men may take their seats and vote as they are generally ready to follow the dictum of John Sandfield. But a day of recompense will come and teach them that the people of Ontario are not to be trifled with in any such manner. No man who has been unseated, unless lost to all sense of honor and justice, would dare to take his seat in the House while a Judge has declared his seat vacant. We can hardly think that even the defeated martyrs who were so lost to honor and a sense of right as to sell their constitutents and go over to John Sandfield will be so void of shame and the fear of the just reproach that such an act would entail as to vote for a speaker in the approaching parliament. But the people of Ontario may be prepared for the worst. John Sandfield is not very scrupulous as to the means he may use to retain the Premiership; and we do fear that there are a few left in Ontario as ready to do his bidding as the poor creature who lately misrepresented the West Riding of Peterborough.

The Haliburton Railway.

On Friday last a large number of the citizens of Peterboro proceeded to Bobcaygeon to witness the turning of the first sod of the above railway. Over 40 gentlemen left Peterboro, and the number was largely increased on the way. Among them we noticed Sheriff Hall, Messrs. A. Smith, G. Edmison, D. W Dumble, W. Toole, J. Brown, T. Bradburn, W. Eastland, J T. Henthorn, J. White, J. Bertram, D. Hopkins, and numerous others.

On their arrival the party was met by Mr. Boyd, S. McLelland, D. McDonald, Mr. Hand, of the Independent; and, indeed, by all the leading citizens of the village. A public meeting was held which was well attended, although notice of it had only been given the day before, and to not a few only that morning.

Mr. Boyd occupied the Chair, and in a few appropriate remarks explained the object of the meeting. He remarked that all the people of that section of the country were aware of the necessity for a railroad The wealth of the surrounding neighborhood only required development to prove it's vastness and importance. Bobcaygeon was well situated as most all the railway men acknowledged, and by their anxiety to reach it testified. He remarked that the people of Bowmanville had talked railroad, but he was afraid they were not alive in the matter. They were fighting about their own interests—as to who would own the harbor, and were neglecting to push their surveys as they ought. The people of Bobcaygeon, he believed, would not wait on them, but would take the first road that would come. Peterboro showed that she was alive in the matter; she has voted $340,000. and proposes $40,000 more to secure the road here. The lakes, he believed, were no great difficulty—and ere this was completed, the Cobourg road would be opened, and perhaps the Grand Junction too, and there would be another outlet and two roads. He explained how the Cobourg people were giving $90,000 in cash, and the company promised $100,000 more to open the road to Peterboro Peterboro was giving $80,000 to get the road to that village, and he believed it was to the interest of the people to assist all in their power. Mr. Fowler was now working on the road, and he believed he meant work too, and that ere long the road might be a certainty.

Mr. Fowler explained the state of progress, and assured them that he meant work. But, of course, he could not do all himself. He was spending his money at present and would do so until the people had confidence that the road was sure, and then he believed they would aid him with Bonuses. He had men and teams at work. The Cobourg and Marmora Company was going to complete the way across Rice Lake. He was to have the work and also the re-opening of the road to Peterboro; and that portion would be a fixed fact before July next. If he got the iron ordered this fall he would have the whole road graded before June and a train running, and all that by the first of July—if the people gave him reasonable aid.

Mr. Dumble urged on the people the importance of the enterprize, and its advantages to them, showed the improbability of getting the Bowmanville road, and thought as this was the only certainty, the people should encourage the work and render it aid by way of fair bonuses.

Mr. W. B. Read then read the following resolution, seconded by Duncan McDonald, (both old Peterboro men): That the people of Bobcaygeon and the adjoining county, sincerely sympathize with the effort being made to connect this Village with Peterboro by a railway, and they hereby pledge themselves to lend a hearty and substantial assistance to the work. This was carried unanimously.

Mr. George Bick moved, seconded by Mr. J. Junkins, That in the opinion of this meeting, it is the duty of the various municipalities interested in the construction of the railway to the front, to vote substantial bonuses to aid in securing the early construction and completion thereof. Carried unanimously.

It was then moved by Mr. S. McLelland, seconded by Mr. Joseph Brown, "That Harvey being connected with Bobcaygeon by navigable lakes, will in the event of the railway being built, obtain a valuable outlet for the proceeds of her soil and forests, and hence should be willing to aid the work." Carried

The people then proceeded to the place south of the Little Bob, where the first sod was turned by Mr. Bick, in the absence of the Reeve of Verulam.

The people of Bobcaygeon expressed themselves interested in connection with Peterboro, and promised to do what they could to secure an early completion of the road.

Mr. Fowler held a meeting the same evening at Fenelon Falls.

A Bonus of $40,000 is talked of from the Village and municipality, also a Bonus from Harvey; and when the road goes to Fenelon Falls a bonus from Fenelon.

OUR PUBLIC MEN.—Mr. H. Illman, of the Canadian Printing and Publishing Co. Ottawa, called on us and showed us some very nice steel engravings of some of our public men. One of Baron Lisgar is a very nice one indeed, and we are informed a very excellent likeness. Mr. Illman informed us that it the is intention of the Company to prepare engravings of all our public men, irrespective of party. This is just what is required, and the Canadian public will, no doubt, appreciate the effort, and supply themselves with good plates of all the leading politicians, divines and men of note in the Dominion. For the small sum of fifty cents a beautiful steel engraving of any or all of them can be obtained.

Government organs are exceedingly anxious to impress the people with the idea that it is folly to be preparing for the election for the commons. Their idea is that an other session of the commons must take place first, and hence what is the use of moving in the matter yet. But John Sandfield's sharp practice last February, should afford a useful lesson, not to put off too long. The fact, that last election we had not our candidate selected in time for the East Riding, was the only cause of his defeat. Let the reformers not be caught napping this time, but have their men ready, and then their success is certain.

On the woman question, a lady says, in a communication to the Des Moines Register: "You may look at this matter in whatever light you will, but simmer it down, and it is but a quarrel with the Almighty that we are not all men.

The provisional directors of the Peterborough and Haliburton Railway claim having expended $785 in obtaining the charter and preliminaries for that road. The following is the account as presented to Mr. Fowler, we are told:

THANKSGIVING DAY.—Thursday last was proclaimed a day for thanksgiving by vice regal edict for bounties bestowed by the Great Giver of every good and perfect gift. There were services in most, if not all, the churches in town during the day. Not a few however enjoyed the day as a holiday, i.e. as holidays are generally enjoyed in drinking and swearing at the corners of the streets, and having a little fun. But these do so when the opportunity offers itself. Others remember that "in six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work," but the Seventh is the rest of the Lord thy God, and hence considered it no evil to mind their business. Every day is a day for thanksgiving. "Give us this day our daily bread," reminds us to be daily thankful for the daily gift Poor thanksgiving it must be when only one day in the year is spent for the purpose. Hundreds can be found who are daily ashamed to thank God for their daily mercies, and yet who read their fellows (better than they) homilies on "thanksgiving;" other days. Men who hesitate not to profane the name of their Creator, Saviour and Comforter, during 364 days of the year, are sticklers for holidays, at the end of which they strip themselves of their piety (?) as they put off their holiday attire, and yet these are the men who too often worship God by Royal edict. Would Athenians, as Paul saw it a species of over much religion. Satan sometimes transforms himself into an angel of light, and appears among the saints, and, no doubt, thanks God there, that he is not as other men, who work on vice regal holidays. By all means let thanks be rendered for all the mercies, benefits and bounties of Providence, but let them be rendered daily, for daily blessings, and then God will receive the praise, if the creature be one of his. The prayers of the wicked are an abomination to the Most High, and it is perfect absurdity to expect perfect praise by the authority of Governors. It is all of grace.

PRESENTATION.—Some of the friends of the Bible Christian Church, of Peterboro, on Tuesday evening, the 21st inst. presented to Mrs (Rev.) J. W. Bate her, through Mrs. T. Davis in their behalf, an excellent Sewing Machine, another evidence of their kindness and liberality during the past three years, accompanied by the following REPLY.

DEAR FRIENDS,—I accept with feeling of gratitude, the kind gift which you have presented me, and wish to assure you that I shall always value not only on account of its intrinsic worth, but as a token of your kindness to me as a minister and as a friend, who have endeared yourselves to me during the two years we have labored among you, and I trust we shall be spared to labor together for many years to come.

May the blessing of Heaven rest upon you all.

Yours affectionately,

Peterboro, Nov. 21, 1871.

The Railroad No Onwards.

As will be seen in another column, the town council has determined to allow the By-law to come before the people on the 19th of December next; when, no doubt, the will fully approve of the action of the council. The taxpayers will remember the unanimously expressed desire of several large public meetings to extend our railway communications to the north, at the least to Mud Lake. At one of those meetings a very large committee was appointed to consider the whole matter of railways northwards and to the front; and numerous meetings on that committee have been held, at very one of which the greatest unanimity prevailed in regard to extension to the north, every one being convinced that this was necessary to develope the fertile of the back country and also to secure a fair share of it for the Town of Peterborough.

A ROASTED FIRE BRAND.

Scarcely did the people fall on the subject of a railway to the north, that a special committee was empowered to communicate with Belleville, Cobourg and the Midland Company, to find terms on which a road could be secured to Mud Lake, and if possible a market road to the north at the same time. A deputation came here from Belleville, but nothing could be done with them. The Grand Junction Co. was not in a position to say it seemly that their proposed road would be built, and in consequence they returned home. The Midland Co., through their Solicitor, Mr. Smith, informed the committee of the railway committee that if the town built the road to the Lake, the company would run over it for them, and nothing more

The Mayor, Mr. Fairbairn, Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Stratton, were then sent as a deputation to Cobourg, to see what could be done to resuscitate the Cobourg road to Peterborough and extend it to Mud Lake. Col Chamblias, the managing director of the Cobourg, Peterboro and Marmora Railway and Mining Company met the deputation, together with a number of the Town Council of Cobourg, and the prospect of the proposal of Peterboro was discussed. Col. Chamblias told the deputation that if he could feel satisfied that he could expect a reasonable interest on the money expended by the company, he was ready to advise a reasonable outlay.

Three of the members of the Peterboro deputation led Col. Chamblias, and the people of Cobourg, to believe that Peterboro would build the road to the Lake at a cost of $75,000 to $100 000 and grant sole running power to the company if they would re-open the road to Peterborough.

No member of the deputation was more earnest in his advocacy of the road, and none represented more strongly that the town would give a bonus of $75,000, at least, than Mr. Carnegie. In vain did Mr. Stratton remind them that the town would never vote a cent for a road on the terms talked of.

A road to the lakes, then, was an absolute necessity, and in the opinion of Mr Carnegie, the town was ready to give $75,000 for seven or eight miles of a road, and he declared he was ready to go home and recommend doing so, to the people. Now he hesitates to advise that sum to secure a road of 25 miles to Bobcaygeon and also to Fenelon Falls. Why is this? The ratepayers may reasonably enquire: why such a change in the mind of the editor of our contemporary?

Town Council.

Monday Evening, Nov 20th.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment. Present the Mayor and Messrs. O'Birne, Smith, English, Doherty, Rutherford, Toole, Stevenson and Edmison.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

Communication from Captain O'Donnell asking the usual allowance to the members of the fire company. Referred to the Finance Committee.

Petitions were received from Mrs. Binsette stating that she was unabled to pay her taxes, and asking the remission of the same—received.

An account from Mr. McLaren for Hose amounting to $508.49, was referred to the Committee on finance.

On motion of Mr. English, seconded by Mr. Smith, The taxes of Wm. Armstrong, being part of lot No. 1 east of Water Street and north of Charlotte Street were remitted, according to agreement with the chief constable for the use of the lot for a pound.

Moved by Mr. Doherty, seconded by Mr Stevenson,—That application of J. C. Sullivan be granted, provided he has the necessary qualifications.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. O'Beirne, seconded by Mr. Smith.—That the accounts pertaining in connection with the Railway Committee, on extension to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls, be referred to the Finance Committee with power to examine into the same, and to order payment if found correct. Carried.

Mr. Toole, as chairman of the Street and Bridge Committee, read and submitted a report adopted.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Doherty, That when the application was made to this Council to erect a powder magazine by the hardware men, it was represented to them that they would pay a sum that would do more than pay interest, and would be a source of revenue to the town. Resolved, therefore, that this Council will take no further charge of the magazine, but that it be handed over to the parties using it for storing powder, which, should they refuse, or neglect to accept, this Council will close it up.—Carried.

On motion of Mr. Edmison the Council went into committee of the whole, on the re-consideration of the By-law, submitted to the council at the last meeting of the council, together with the agreement in connection therewith. Mr. O'Beirne in the chair. After considerable discussion the agreement was amended, when the committee arose, and the council resumed.

Mr. Toole, as chairman of the Committee, read and submitted a report, which was lost.

Mr. Toole called the attention of the council to the nature of the Otonabee Bridge, that the county council at their meeting refused to carry out the arrangements entered into in providing the whole of the money in the mean time, as promised by the Warden, and recommending the adoption of means to obtain the amount of town's share.

On motion of Mr. Edmison, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, a street lamp was agreed to be erected at the intersection of Murray and Bethune street.

The Council adjourned for two weeks

Presbyterian Union.

The debate on the Union of the Presbyterian churches in Canada terminated last night in the Canada Presbyterian Assembly on the motion of Dr. Proudfoot, seconded by himself, being carried by a considerable majority. The addition which Mr. Proudfoot made to his motion was intended to guard against the probability of any demand being made by the Church upon the State for a covenant in aid of collegiate education. We are not to be understood as saying that the motion thus finally adopted met with anything like an overwhelming support in the Assembly, for the amendment of Prof. Inglis, though lost when put against that of Dr. Proudfoot minus the addendum—was rejected only by a very small majority; and had the vote been taken at a time, which many of the members calculated upon, the result would, in all likelihood, have been different.

Dr. Proudfoot's motion states that the union shall be consumed on the understanding that all literary and theological institutions of the contracting bodies shall be put by Act of Parliament in exactly the same relation to that church as each now sustains to its particular denomination. At the same time further action on the subject of union is practically postponed for three years, in order to allow the churches interested time to complete the scheme of endowment for their colleges, which in the one case has been for some time in the other is about to be commenced. The college at Kingston will, it is anticipated, by that time be fully equipped and endowed, so as to require no pecuniary assistance from the United body, and the theological institutions at Toronto and Montreal will, it is hoped, have a fund of $250,000, and then the eight Professors, whom it is proposed shall labour in these Colleges, will be henceforth sustained without any demand being made from year to year upon the liberality of the people.

We presume that as the theological faculty is to be kept intact at Kingston, there will have to be four Professors of Theology there also, as well as at Morrin, and that a permanent endowment will have to be provided for these chairs as well, before the union is consummated. The college in Halifax will naturally have to be on the same footing, and we presume that it will be left to the Church of the Lower Provinces, to place that too on a satisfactory basis. It will thus be seen that a very considerable amount of work has to be gone through, according to this programme, before the Presbyterian Churches of the Dominion are in a condition to proceed to the consummation of union. This delay will give time for full examination, and no doubt lead to ample modifications.—Globe.

There is a very generally expressed opinion that the taking of the census of 1871 has been so manipulated as to prevent Ontario getting her due share of representation. Only six new members are expected from the increase of population in Ontario, during the last ten years.

	1871.	1861
Ontario	1,630,843	1 396,091
Quebec	1,190,505	1,111,566
New Brunswick	285,777	252,047
Nova Scotia	387,800	330,856
Total	3,484,924	Total 3,004,561

The increase, therefore, for the last ten years has been 395,295. It is believed that there is a vast number of French Canadians, now residing in the United States who are reckoned in the census of 1871; that in consequence, the apparent population of the Province of Quebec is so much more, than it ought to be, and hence the evil, as the number of representatives is fixed at 67, the number to a representative, is unduly increased, thereby robbing Ontario of at least 4 new representatives giving only 6 instead of 10 as was confidently expected. There is every reason to believe that this was intended, as it is well known that the enumerators were sworn to secrecy on all matters relating to the census. In vain did news paper men apply to them for items of information. They were met with the answer, "we are sworn to secrecy, and cannot tell you any thing." If they had given or permitted a fair report in the different counties, enterprizing reporters would have, given long ago, exact reports of items of interest in each county, city and town, and Mr. Dunkin would have been unabled to falsify figures, no matter how much soever he might have been inclined to do it The very fact that they were not allowed to copy from the enumerators returns of this county led us to believe that something more than justice to Ontario was prearranged, and now we must leave our readers to judge of the facts from the reports furnished, after nearly ten months of delay and hesitancy in giving the figures to the people.

HERE is a good example for public men to follow. Governor Gratz Brown, of Missouri says that when he entered upon the duties of the present office he made up his mind "not to use anything in the shape of alcoholic drinks." He has adhered strictly to the rule, and means to continue it "so long as he may be counted with any administration of public affairs." In this decision of his mind in the matter "The New York Tribune, referring to the matter, says: "A similar resolution made by all public men, with reasonable assurance that it would not be kept, would go a great way toward increasing the confidence of the people in their servants. We think that we are justified that the effect in Washington would be of once magical and gratifying. It is not the representative who gets thoroughly drunk who is the most mischievous. He can be removed by the Sergeant-at-Arms; it is the member who makes speeches and introduces measures in a chronically muddled condition who is the saddest nuisance."

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—At noon to-day the Russian squadron was escorted to the battery by the United States fleet, and after it dropped anchor the admiral's salute of 21 guns was fired. Monsieur Catacazy and a deputation from the reception committee boarded the Svetland. The committee were presented to the Duke, and congratulated him upon his safe arrival and tendered him the welcome of the citizens of New York.—The Grand Duke thanked the committee for the great honor already extended to him, and said he would accept any civilities they had arranged to extend to him. It was then decided that the Grand Duke would remain on board until to-morrow and that he would be received on board the Mary Powell, off Pier No 1, at 1 o'clock. The military will assemble at noon and form, and the line of march will be taken up Broadway at one o'clock.

HISTORY.—Everybody has heard how Sir Walter Raleigh destroyed the history he had just written because he doubted credibility of testimony in general from hearing conflicting of some occounts that had just happened. It would appear as if the Rev. Canon Kingsley were afflicted with some such morbid skepticism. Probably he regards nothing as true but the works of fiction he writes himself, for we are told that he has resigned his chair at Cambridge in disgust with such a system of imposture. He is reported as saying that he "resolved that he would not bother his head whith of that sort while he could get on without them. "If it is so with the teachers, what must it by with the students? They may fancy that they can get along without such things. It much be pleasant to the young ladies to be told this be grave and reverend professors whose opinion will be quoted as sufficient authority But it will not do to wipe out History with a sponge. Its study was never intended to be an exercise merely of verbal memory. It is just because it calls for discrimination and develops judgment that we cannot do without it. It is too much the fashion even now to clothe knowledge in the garb of fiction, to make it easy and attractive. But their is no royal road to learning. Instead of patiently collating hard, dry facts we too much follow fancy and mistake theory or truth.

Appealing to the Passions

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR:—Under the above heading, the Editor of the Review forgetful of the many instances in which he and his friends participated in appealing to the passions of the Electors of these Ridings during the last election, in the last number of the Review, strongly denounces those who endeavored to excite the minds of the different classes and creeds of our people, for the purpose of inducing them to support the particular candidate in whose return they may be interested. Had the article in question been confined to what would have been legitimate strictures on the evil and reprehensible course of such proceeding on the part of either party, too, much praise could not have been bestowed on the Editor of the Review, for by such he would have endeavored to raise the minds of those who participate actively in such matters above what, after the best of canvassing is terminated, must appear to be conducive to destroying that harmony and good feeling which should exist among all classes and creeds of our community; that harmony and good feeling which should be the earnest desire of those who have the welfare of their country at heart, at least to bring into and foster in existence. Does Mr Carnegie not animate by such motives, but with that spleen peculiar to himself could not let an occasion pass without seeking to fix on Mr O'Donohoe and Mr. Leonard the odium of having inflamed the minds of our co-religionists in this Riding against the Government of J S. McDonald, and against his venal supporter, Mr. Carnegie, on what, from the article in question, must appear to be unquestionable grounds. If such had been true, much better for all that there should be no reply, and that the charges contained therein should have remained unquestioned, and have been allowed to die away in silence. Such not being true, it is a duty which is due to the electors of this Riding to challenge the statements and accusations therein contained.

Why Mr. O'Donohue and Mr. Leonard should be charged with appealing to the passions of the Roman Catholics of this Riding, is something I cannot conceive and I fear is known to none but the enlightened Editor of the Review. Were they asked to vote against Mr. Carnegie because he was not as liberal as Mr Fairbairn in his ideas of the rights and privileges which should be allowed the Catholic minority of this Province? Were they asked to vote against Mr. Carnegie because his votes favored the rights of the Protestant majority as antagonistic to the rights of the Catholics? Were they asked to vote against Mr. Carnegie because of any personal grounds? Were they asked to support Mr. Fairbairn and reject Mr. Carnegie because of any SPECIAL NOTICES.

Butter and cheese are almost indispensible articles of food. Properly used, they are nutritious and healthy: but an inordinate use of either causes indigestion and dyspepsia. Parsells' Purgative Pills, judiciously used, will remove both of these troubles.

Husband (Returned from a call on Judge Jones). Well Mary, I have examined those certificates and found them straight as a string, there are so many imitations and counterfeits sticking like barnacles to every good medicine that I have learned to look upon the good and bad as one alike. It is very wrong however, this PAIN-KILLER of Perry Davis has stood the test of time Doctors and Druggists have not been able to bush it up, it's as you say, Mary in everybodys house and I am astonished to find it has been doing such a world of good about here and we have known nothing about it.

Wife:—It must have cured somebodys rheumatism or you wouldn't have seen cor rected so easily.

Husband:—Converted, why it has cured a dozen of cases about here within a year, Simon Tinkler who you know used to be such an awful sufferer with it and was laid up half the time. why it was this same Perry Davis' PAIN-KILLER that cured him. Geo Trotter who Doctor Squills used to pity so much and call such a great sufferer, he too was cured with the PAIN-KILLER and what more he writes that he paid Doctor Squills over one hundred Dollars for attending him and was growing worse all the while, here my dear rub some of it on my shoulder at once I am through with Squills, if Pain-Killer can't cure me nothing will I am convinced of that.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL!
Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Sensible physicians know that medicines are to be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place, creating a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

FURS---ATTENTION.

The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in furs against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.

Montreal and Toronto shows a good example of dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.

He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a safe guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.

The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.

And whereas, to carry into effect the said objects it will be necessary for the said Municipal Council to raise by way of loan the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred Dollars.

And, whereas, it will require the sum of Two Hundred and Three Dollars [$203 00] to be raised annually by special rate for the payment of said debt, or loan, and interest, as also hereinafter mentioned,

And, whereas, the amount of the whole rateable property of the said municipality, irrespective of any future increase of the same, and also irrespective of any temporary investment of the sinking fund hereinafter mentioned or any part thereof, according to the last revised Assessment Rolls of the said municipality is One Hundred and Sixteen Thousand Two Hundred and Twenty-nine dollars, [$116,229].

And, whereas, the existing debt of the said Village of Ashburnham is nothing, [$0 00] and there is nothing in arrears for principal or interest.

And, whereas, for paying the interest and creating an equal yearly sinking fund for (he) paying the said One Thousand Three Hundred dollars, it will require an equal annual special rate of one and three fourth mills in the dollar, in addition to all other rates to be levied in each year.

Be it therefore enacted by the Municipal Council of the Village of Ashburnham,

That it shall be lawful for the Reeve of the said Village to raise by way of loan from any person or persons, body or bodies corporate, who may be willing to advance the same upon the credit of the debentures hereinafter mentioned, a sum of money not exceeding in the whole the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred dollars, and to cause the same to be paid into the hands of the Treasurer of the said Village of Ashburnham, for the purposes and with the objects herein set forth, viz.: Fifty Hundred Dollars, as required by the Board of School Trustees, and Five Hundred Dollars to aid the Town of Peterborough to purchase a Steam Fire Engine and Hose

That it shall be lawful for the said Reeve to cause any number of debentures to be made for such sums of money as may be required, not less than one hundred dollars each, and not to exceed in the whole the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred Dollars, [$1,300] and the said debentures shall be sealed with the seal of the said Municipality, and be signed by the Reeve and countersigned by the Treasurer of the said Village.

That said debentures shall be made payable in ten years, at the furthest, from the day hereinafter mentioned, for this By-law to take effect at the office of the Treasurer of the said Municipality, and shall have attached to them coupons for the payment of interest.

That the said debentures shall bear interest at and after the rate of six per centum per annum from the date thereof, and said interest shall be payable on the First day of January and on the First day of July in, each year, at the office of the Treasurer of the said Municipality.

That for the purpose of forming a sinking fund for the payment of said debentures, and the interest at the rate aforesaid, to become due thereon, an equal annual special rate of one and three-fourth mills in the dollar, shall in addition to all other rates, be raised, levied, and collected in each year upon the rateable property in said Municipality, during the continuance of the said debentures or any of them.

And that this By-law shall take effect, and come into operation upon the fifteenth day of December, 1871.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the glossy and freshness of youth. The hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. It wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this remedy has attained, by its remarkable cures of scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have induced the proprietor to present to the afflicted a more effectual alterative than any he has hitherto been able to offer. Though we do not claim for it the miraculous virtues sometimes ascribed to patent medicines, we do believe it to be the best blood purifier that medical science can produce. Under its use the scrofulous taint is expelled from the system, and the various eruptions and sores which arise from it are healed. Even when it fails to benefit, it rarely does harm. Containing no mercury or other mineral ingredient, it may be taken when the occasion requires, with perfect safety. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of excrementitious matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Dyspepsia, Constitutional Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the taint of humors in the blood. The Sarsaparilla is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who suffer from Debility and Lassitude, Despondency, Sleeplessness, and troubled with Nervous Incoherencies or Fears, or any of the symptoms symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and continuing evidence of its restorative powers in it.

The Dream of the Dying Child

BY ANDREW GLASS.

"Mother, how I long to wander
Where the waters, sweet and low,
Sing the music of the mountains
To the flowers that bud and blow,
Oh! I am weary of the city,
And I long for the delight
That pervaded all my being
As I dreaming lay last night,"

"Lay your head upon my bosom;
Tell me dearest of your dream."
"In my vision I was wafted,
Mother to a mountain stream;
Soft and low the winds were sighing
Through the verdant, blooming trees;
Down the glen came sweetest music,
Floating on the perfumed breeze.

"Suddenly there stood before me
Quite a throng of maidens fair—
How describe their robes of glory,
Or the gems that decked their hair!
Lovingly they smiled upon me,
Then in accents sweet and mild,
Said, with tremulous emotion,
'Come with us poor little child.

"'We will lead thee to a city
That no tyrant ever trod,
Nor those destitute of pity,
Who on earth made gaid their god,
Sighs and tears—sad fruit of sin'rice—
Never yet found entrance there,
And thy Elder Brother's glory
Maketh all thing wondrous fair!

"'Scenes of ever-growing glory
Fadeless flowers of sweet perfume,
Rivers flowing clear as crystal
Through the realms beyond the tomb!
Sweet angelic strains of music
Aye resounding through the air;
Hearts refined by earthly sorrow,
Waiting to receive you there!

"'Though thy form be weak and fragile,
Crushed beneath this iron age,
Whose proud annals might be written
With men's life-stream every page—
Come with us to lands seraphic,
Far more beautiful than this,
Where the tears that dim thy vision
Shall give place to perfect bliss.'

"Then they struck their golden harp-strings
Waved their fadeless crowns on high,
Glided gently down the valley,
Lost forever to mine eye.
Down the glade swept cooling breezes,
Playing on my fevered brow,
And around me floated music—
Hark! methinks I hear it now!"

With a cry her mother started,
Grasped her darling's icy hand,
Whose pure spirit had departed,
With the sweet angelic band.
She was left alone with sorrow,
Through the weary coming years!
Weeping widow! thy sad annals
Might be written in thy tears.

CHAPTER X.

CHANGES.

"Lillie, you shall tell me what ails you."

"Nothing ails me, John."

"Yes, there does; you were crying when I came in."

"Oh, well that,s nothing!"

"Oh, but it is a great deal! What is the matter? I can see that you are not happy."

"Oh, pshaw, John! I am as happy as I ought to be, I dare say; there isn't much the matter with me, only a little blue, and I don't feel quite strong."

"You don't feel strong! I've noticed it, Lillie."

"Well you see, John, the fact is, that I never have got through this month without going to the sea-side. Mamma always took me. The doctors told her that my constitution was such that I couldn't get along without it; but I dare say I shall do well enough in time, you know."

"But, Lillie," said John, "if you do need sea-air you must go. I can't leave my business; that's the trouble."

"Oh, no, John don't think of it. I ought to make an effort to get along.—You see, it's very foolish in me, but places effect my spirits so. It's perfectly absurd how I am affected."

"Well, Lillie, I hope this place does not effect you unpleasantly," said John.

"It's a nice, darling place, John, and it's silly in me; that this house somehow has a depressing effect on my spirits. You know it's not like the house I've been used to. It has a sort of an old look; and I can't help feeling that it puts me in mind of those that are dead and gone; and then I think I shall be dead and gone too, some day, and it makes me cry so. Isn't it silly of me John,

"Poor little pussy!" said John.

"You see, John our rooms are lovely; but they aren't modern and cheerful, like those I've been accustomed to. They make me feel pensive and sad all the time; but I'm trying to get over it."

"Why, Lillie!" said John' "would you like the rooms refurnished? it can easily be done if you wish it."

"Oh, no, no, dear! you are too good; and I'm sure the rooms are lovely, and it would hurt Graces feelings to change them. No; I must try and get over it. I know just how silly it is, and I shall try to overcome it. If I had only more strength, I believe that I could."

"Well darling you must go to the sea-side. I shall have you sent right off to Newport. Grace can go with you."

"Oh, no, John; not for the world.—Grace must stay and keep house for you. She's such a help to you, that it would be a shame to take her away. But I think mamma would go with me,—if you could write their and engage my rooms and all that, why mamma could stay with me, you know. To be sure it would be a trial not to have you there, but then if I could get up my strength, you know,"—

"Exactly, certainly; and, Lillie, how would you like the parlors arranged if you had your own way?"

"Oh, John don't think of it."

"But I just want to know for curiosity. Now, how would you have them if you could?"

"Well, then, John, don't you think it would be lovely to have them frescoed? Did you ever see the Follingsbees' in New York? They are so lovely!—one was all in blue, and the other in crimson, opening into each other; with carved furniture, and those marqutrie tables, and all sorts of little French things.—They had such a cheerful look."

"Now, Lillie, if you do want our rooms like that you shall have them."

"Oh, John, you are too good! I couldn't ask such a sacrifice."

"Oh, Pshaw! it isn't a sacrifice. I don't doubt I shall like them better myself. Your taste is perfect, Lillie; and now I think of it, I wonder that I thought of bringing you here without consulting you in very particular. A woman ought to be queen in her own house, I am sure."

"But, Gracie! Now, John, I know she has associations, with all the things in the house, and it would be cruel to her," said Lillie with a sigh.

"Pshaw! Grace is a good, sensible girl, and ready to make any rational change. I suppose we have been living behind the times, and we are somewhat rusty, that's a fact; but Gracie will enjoy new things as much as anybody, I dare say."

"Well, John, since you are set on it, there's Charlie Ferrols, one of my particular friends; he's an architect, and does all about arranging rooms and houses and furniture. He did the Follingsbees', and the Hortons', and the Jeromes', and no end of real nobby people's houses; and made them perfectly lovely. People say that one wouldn't know that they weren't in Paris, in houses that he does."

Now our John was by nature a good chip of the old Anglo-Saxon block; and if there was anything that he had no special affinity for, it was for French things. He had small opinion of French morals, and French ways in general! but then at this momnnt he saw his Lillie, whom, but half an hour before, he found all pail and tear drenched, now radient and joyous, sleek as a humming-bird, with the light in her eyes, and the rattle on the tip of her tongue; and he felt so delighted to see her bright and gay and joyous, that he would have turned his house into the Jardin Mobille, if that were possible.

Lillie had the prettiest little caressing tricks imaginable; and she perched herself on his knee, and laughed and chatted so gayly, and pulled his whiskers so saucily, and then, springing up, began arranging herself in such an astonishing daintiness of device, and fluttering before him with such variety of well-assorted plumage, that John was quite taken off his feet. He did not care so much whether what she willed to do were, "Wisest, virtuousest, discreetest, best," as feel that what she wished to do must be done at any rate.

"Why, darling!" he said in his rapture; "why didn't you tell me all this before? Here you have been growing sad and blue, and losing your vivacity and spirits, and never told me why!"

"I thought it was my duty, John, to try to bear it," said Lillie, with a sweet look of a virgin saint. "I thought perhaps I should get used to things in time; and I think its a wife's duty to accommodate herself to her husband's circumstances."

"No, it's a husband's duty to accomodate himself to his wife's wishes," said John. "What's that fellow's address? I'll write to him about coming down fourth-with."

"But John do tell Grace that it's your wish. I don't want her to think that it's I that am doing all this. Now pray do think whether you really want it yourself. You see it must be so natural for you to like the old things! They must have associations, and I wouldn't for the world, now be the one to change; and, after all, how silly it was for me to feel blue!"

"Don't say any more, Lillie. Let me see,—next week," he said taking out his pocket-book, and looking over his memoranda,—"next week I'll take you down to Newport; and you write to-day to your mother to meet you there, and be your guest. I'll write and engage the rooms at once."

"I don't know what I shall do without you, John."

"Oh, well, I couldn't stay possible! But I may run down now and then, for a night, you know."

"Well we must make that do," said Lillie, with a pensive sigh.

Thus two very important moves on Miss Lillie's checker-board of life were skilfully made. The house was to be refitted, and the Newport precedent established.

Now dear friends, don't think Lillie a pirate, or a conspirator, or wolf-in sheep's-clothing, or anything else but what she was,—a pretty, selfish woman; undeveloped in her conscience and affections, and strong in her instincts and prescepetions; in a blind way using what means were strong in her line to carry purposes. Lillie had always found her prettiness, her helplessness, and her tears so very useful in carrying her points in life that she resorted to them as her lawful stock in trade. Neither were her blues entirely shamming. These comes a time after marrage, when a husband, if he be anything of a man, has something else to do, than to make direct love to his wife. He cannot be on duty at all hours to fan her, and to shawl her, and admire her. His love must express itself through other channels. He must be a full man for her sake; and, as a man, must go forth to a whole world of interests that takes him from her.—Now what in this case shall a woman do, whose life lies in petting and adoration and display?

Specialists had no la in monde, no fashionable circle, no Bois de Boulogne, and no beaux, to make amends for a husband's engrossments. Grace was sisterly and kind; but what on earth had they in common to talk about?—Lillie's wardrobe was in all the freshness of bridal exuberance, and there was nothing more to be got, and so, for the moment, no stimulus in this line. But then where to wear all those fine French dresses! Lillie had been called on, and invited once to little social evening parties, through the whole round of old, respectable families that lived under the elm arches of Springdale; and she had found it rather stupid. There was not a man to make admirer of except the young minister, who, after the first afternoon of seeing her, returned to his devotion to Rose Ferguson.

You know, ladies, Æsop has a pretty little fable as follows: A young man man fell desperately in love with a cat, and prayed to Jupiter to change her to a woman for his sake. Jupiter was so obliging as to grant his prayer; and behold, a soft, satin-skinned, purring, graceful woman was given into his arms.

But the legend goes on to say that, while he was delighting in her charms, she heard the sound of mice behind the wainscot, and left him forwith to rush after her congenial prey.

Lillie had heard afar the sound of mice at Newport, and she longed to be after them once more. Had she not a prestige now as a rich young married lady?

Had she not any number of mouse-traps in the way of ravishing toilets? She thought it all over, till she was sick with longing, and was sure that nothing but the sea air would do her any good; and so she fell to crying, and kissing her faithful John, till she gained her end like a veritable little cat as she was.

CHHPTER XI.

NEWPORT! OR, THE PARADISE OF NOTHING TO DO.

Behold, now, our Lillie at the height of her heart's desire, installed in fashionable apartments at Newport, under the placid chaperonship of dear mamma, who never saw the least harm in any earthly thing her Lillie chose to do.

All the dash and flash and furbelow of upper-tendom was there; and Lillie now felt the full power and glory of being a rich, pretty, young married woman, with oceans of money to spend, and nothing on earth to do but follow the fancies of the passing hour.

Wasn't it something to flame forth in wondrous toilets in the eyes of Belle Treverse and Margy Silloway and Lottie Cavers, who were not married; and before the Simpkinses and the Tompkinses and the Jenkinses, who, last year, had said hateful things about her, and intimated that she had gone off in her looks, and was on her way to be an old maid?

And wasn't it a triumph when all her old beaux came flocking round her, and her parlor became a daily and lounging-place for all the idle swains, both of her former acquaintance and of the new-comers, who drifted with a tide of fashion? Never had she been so much the rage; never had she been declared so "stunning." The effect of all this good fortune on her health was immediate. We all know how the spirits affect the bodily welfare; and hence, my dear gentlemen, we desire it to be solemnly impressed on you, that there is nothing as good for a woman's health as to give her her own way

Lillie now, from this simple cause, received enormous accessions of vigor. While at home with plain, sober John, trying to walk in the quiet paths of domesticity, how did her spirits droop! If you only could have had a vision of her brain and spinal system, you would have seen how there was no nervous fluid there, and how all the fine little cords and fibers, that string the muscles, were wilting like flowers out of water; but now she could bathe the longest and the strongest of any one, could ride on the beach half the day, and dance the German into the small hours of the night, with a degree of vigor which showed conclusively what a fine thing for her the Newport air was. Her dancing-list was always over-crowded with applicants; bouquets were showered on her; and the most superb "turn-outs," with their masters for charioteers, wer at her daily disposal.

All this made talk. The world doesn't forgive success; and the ancients informed us that even envious of happy people. It is astonishing to see the quantity of very proper and rational moral reflection that is excited in the breast of society, by any sort of success in life. How it shows them the vanity of earthly enjoyments, the impropriety of setting one's heart on it! How does a successful married flirt impress all her friends with the gross impropriety of having one's head set on gentlemen's attention!

"I must say," said Belle Trevors, "that dear Lillie does astonish me. Now, I shouldn't want to have that dissipated Danforth lounging in my rooms every day, as he does in Lillie's; and then taking her out driving day after day; for my part, I don't think it's respectable.

"Why don't you speak to her?" said Lottie Cavers.

"Oh, my dear! she wouldn't mind me. Lillie always was the most imprudent creature; and, if she goes on so, she'll certainly get awfully talked about. That Danforth is a horrid creature; I know all about him."

As Miss Belle had herself been driving with the "horrid creature" only the week before Lillie came, it must be confessed that her opportunities for observations were of an authentic kind.

Lillie as queen in her own parlor, was all grace and indulgence. Here was now to be the sisterly rois, or, as she laughingly styled it, the maternal. With a ravishing morning-dress, and with a killing little cap about three inches in extent on her head, she enacted the young matron, and gave full permission to Tom, Dick and Harry to make themselves at home in her room, and smoke their cigars there in peace. She "adored the smell;" in fact, she accepted the present of a fancy box of cigarettes from Danforth with graciousness, and would sometimes smoke one purely for good company. She also encouraged her followers to unveil the tender secrets of their souls confidentially to her, and offered gracious mediations on their behalf with any of the flirting Newport fair ones. When they, as in duty bound, said that they saw nobody whom they cared about now she was married, that she was the only woman on earth for them,—she rapped their knuckles briskly with her fan, and bid them mind their manners. All this mode of proceeding gave her an immense success.

But, as we said before, all this was talked about; and ladies in their letters, chronicling the events of the passing hour, sent the tidings up and down the country; and so Miss Letitia Ferguson got a letter from Mrs. Wilcox with full pictures and comments; and she brought the same to Grace Seymour.

"I dare say," said Letitia, "these things have been exaggerated; they always are: still it does seem desirable that your brother should go there, and be with her."

"He can't go and be with her," said Grace, "without neglecting his business, already too much neglected. Then the house is all in confusion under the hands of painters; and there is that young artist up there,—a very elegant gentleman,—giving orders to right and left, every one of which involves further confusion and deeper expense: for my part, I see no end to it. Poor John has got 'the Old Man of the Sea' on his back in the shape of this woman: and I expect she'll be the ruin of him yet. I can't want to break up his illusion about her; because, what good will it do! He has married her, and must live with her; and, for Heaven's sake, let the illusion last while it son! I'm going to draw off, and leave them to each other; there's no other way."

"You are, Gracie?"

"Yes; you see John came to me all stammering and embarrassment, about this making over of the old place; but I put him at ease at once. 'The most natural thing in the world, John,' said I. 'Of course Lillie has her taste; and it's her right to have the house arranged to suit it.' And then I proposed to take all the old family things, and furnish the house that I own on Elm Street, and live their, and let John and Lillie keep house by themselves. You see there's no holding the thing. Married people must be left to themselves; nobody can help them. They must make their own discoveries, fight their own battles, sink or swim, together; and I have detirmined that not by the winking of an eye will I interfere between them."

"He feels badly about it; and yet, I have convinced him that it's best. Poor fellow! all these changes are not a bit to his taste. He liked the place as it was, and the old ways; but John is so unselfish. He has got it in his head that Lillie is very sensitive and peculiar, and that her spirits require all these changes, as well as Newport air."

"Well," said Letitia, "if a man begins to say A in that line, he must say B."

"Of course," said Grace; "and also C and D and so on, down to X, Y, Z. A woman, armed with sick-headaches, nervousness, debility; presentiments, fears, horrors, and all sorts of imaginary and real disease, has an eternal armory of weapons of subjugation. What can a man do? Can he tell her she is lying and shamming? Half the time she isn't; she can actualy work herself into about any physical state she chooses. The fortnight before Lillie went to Newport, she looked realy pale, and ate next to nothing; and she managed admirably to seem to be trying to keep up, and not to complain,—yet see how she can go at Newpport."

"My dear, I wouldn't have him for the world. Whenever he does, he will despise her: and then he will be wretched. For John is no hypocrite, any more then I am. No, I earnestly pray that his soap-bubble may not breake."—

"Well, then," said Letitia, "at least, he might go down to Newport for a day or two; and his presence there might set some things right: it might at least check reports. You might suggest to him that unfriendly things are being said."

"Well, I'll see what I can do," said Grace.

So, by a little feminine t act inspiration, Grace despatched her brother spend a day or two in Newport;

A Beautiful Figure.—Life is like a fountain fed by a thousand streams that perish if one be dried. It is a silver cord twisted with a thousand strings, that part asunder if one be broken.—Thoughtless mortals are surrounded by innumerable dangers, which make it more strong that they escape so long than that almost all perish suddenly at last. We are encompassed with accidents every day to crush the decaying tenement which we inhabit. The seeds of disease are planted in our constitutions by nature. The earth and atmosphere whence we draw the breath of life are impregnated with death. Health is made to operate its own destruction. The food that nourishes contains the element of decay; the soul that animates it vivifies first and than wears it out by its own action. Death lurks in ambush along the path. Notwithstanding this truth is so palpably confirmed by the daily example before our eyes how little do we lay it to heart. We see our friends and neighbours die, but how seldom does it occur to us that our knell may be the next warning to the world.

Good Advice.

Keep good company or none.

Never be idle. If your hands cannot be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of the mind.

Speak the truth always.

Make few promises. Live up to your engagements.

Keep your own secrets if you have any.

Good character is above all things else.

If any speak evil of you, let your life be so that none will believe him.

Drink no kind of intoxicating liquors.

Ever live (misfortunes excepted) within your income.

Make no haste to be rich, if you would prosper.

Egyptian Maxims.

Rev. J. P. Thompson, in his "Notes on Egyptology" in the Bibliotheca Sacra, gives the following maxims from the ancient Egyptians:

"Do not take on airs.

"Do not maltreat an inferior; respect the aged.

"Do not pervert the heart of thy comrade if it is pure.

"Do not make sport of those who are dependent upon the.

"If from an humble condition thou hast become powerful, and the first in the city for opulence, let not riches make proud, for the first author of these good things is God.

"In thou art intelligent, bring up thy son in the love of God. If he is courageous, active, and increase thy property, give him the better recompense. But if the son whom thou hast begotten is a fool, do not turn away thy heart from him, for he is thy son."

The Lord's Prayer.

"I remember, on one occasion," says Mr. Hay, "travelling in the country with a companion, who possessed some knowlege of medicine. We arrived at a door, near which we were about to pitch our tents, when a crowd of Arabs surrounded us, cursing and swearing at the rebellers against God. My friend, who spoke a little Arabic to an elderly person whose garb bespoke him a priest, said: 'Who taught you that we were disbelievers? Hear my daily prayer, and judge for yourselves. He then repeated the Lords prayer. All stood amazed and silent till the priest exclaimed. May God curse me if I again curse those who hold such a belief; nay, more, the prayer shall be my prayer till my hour be come. I pray thee, O Nazarene, repeat that prayer that it may be remembered among us in letters of Gold!"

The Eternal Love.

The great revelation of the summer is the perpetual intimation of the perfect love of God to all that God has made. Our daily life is all the time shutting out whose classes and orders of men from our regards. Our popular theologies are all the time building their little hells, and thrusting the outsiders down into eternal perdition. It is so hard to believe that the great Father loves anybody quite as well as he loves us, and our little circle of friends, or to lift ourselves up to the sublime comprehension of a providence that will bring all things at last into harmony with the eternal law. But he must be very indifferent student of the elder Scriptures who does not often hear, in the summer time, the word of God proclaiming the final salvation of all souls, and the union of man and nature in a perfect accord.

Now, at high noon, on the lonely mountain-summit, looking off on a world bathed in the radiance that pours from a cloudless firmament; at midnight, floating on the silent waters, watching the golden pathway of the moonlight, whereby one fancies he might wander off in the sight of the gleaming gates of heaven; in the peaceful sunset, when, after long wanderings amid green wood paths, emerging on a high rock overlooking the lake, the west is aflame, and the mountain-range behind you is ablaze with the glorious light, and the shadow-world below your feet burns with answering fires; in the long, sweet Sabbath, when the blessed rain comes down like the unrelenting love of God that will not let the heart dry up to dust; then do we behold the visible figures of that eternal Providence which never forgets one creature it has made, but follows the least and the greatest through all the wanderings of the immortal life, and blends the final success of each with the perfect harmony of all.—Rev. A. D. Mayo.

A Prize Farm.

An English paper gives an account of a farm which took the first prize given by the Royal Agricultural Society for the best cultivated farm. It was a farm of 400 acres, devoted to pasture, grain, and stock. The soil was originally poor, but had been much improved with skillfull treatment. Only four horses were kept, yet such was the admirable system of management that they were sufficient for the cultivation necessary for seventy acres of wheat, the same of barley and turnips, besides some oats and beans. The produce sold was 30 3 year old steers and 200 fat sheep—all raised on the farm; 2,450 bushels of wheat and 3,290 bushels of barley, which realized $15,495; besides other produce, as pork, wool, butter cheese, etc. Early in July the turnids nearly covered the ground, and on 72 acres of them the examiners saw no weeds; in fact, the whole farm was perfectly free from them. Twenty tons of guano, bone dust, etc., were used each year. The farmer was a lady.

How to get Big Crops.—As a rule, farmers are much more ambitious to get big prices than big crops. There are a few farms whose average production could not be doubled in a very short time by a little more capital and labor. It is safer to use the capital in farming than in almost any other business. The credit of the plough is quite as good as that of the loom and anvil; and the capital will come, if it is called for. Use more manure, get thirty bushels of wheat where you now get fifteen, and eighty bushels of corn where you now get forty.—The quantity of grain per acre is mainly a question of manure and tillage. A big compost heap makes a full grain bin. With high manuring, the soil needs deeper stirring and a gradual bringing up of the subsoil to the surface. With the present horse harrows and cultivators, nearly all the cultivation can be done by horse-power, at a great saving of expense and a great increase of the crops.

We wonder if it is right for a temperance man to visit saloons to pass away an evening, and perhaps drink soda water, or smoke cigars, thus maintaining by his example those dens of vice and immorality.

Cowden Clarke tells a story of a gentleman who, on making a return of his income to the tax commissioners, wrote on the paper, "For the last three years my income has been somewhat under £150; in future it will be more precarious, as the man is dead of whom I borrowed the money."

A Witness in a liquor trial at London, Vt., recently, aroused an unpleasantness in the court room by testifying that he drank with two men—one of the lawers employed in the case, and the justice who was hearing it.

At the annual Temperance celebration in the Crystal Palace in England, there were 63,000 people present mostly members in regalia of the various Temperance organizations in the country. Hon. Henry Wilson was one of the speakers. A choir of 5,000 voices chanted selections of temperance songs.

A lady at Zanesville, Ohio, in cleaning house, found a package of two pounds of powder, and thinking it was lamp-black she threw it in on the fire. Her husband thinks she has escaped, as nothing has been heard of her since, except a piece of calico dress, which was found on an apple tree in the orchard.

Some of the American journals are growing frantic over a statement recently made by one of their number, to the effect that the result of the "Alabama" arbitration will probably be that instead of England having to pay the United States $12,000,000, the United States will in all likelihood have to pay England $18,000,000. It turns out so it will be the best joke of the season.

Bonaparte once said to Madame de Condorcet, widow of the philosopher and a noted politician of her time: "I do not like women who meddle with politics." To which impudence she instantly replied: Ah! mon general, as long as you men take a fancy to cut off our heads now and then, we are interested in knowing why you do it.

The son of Mayor Mason, of Chicago, was in Troy last Saturday buying stoves.—He is a young man, who just commenced business life. Married a little more than a year ago, he was established in a prosperous stove trade, and had just completed a new house for himself and wife. Everything was swept away, except his wedding presents, which were at the house of his father. The house was saved. The dress were hardly extinguished before young Mason gathered these presents together and started with them for New York. He sold them to Tiffany & Co. for $5,000. With this money he will establish himself, with a stove store for the time being in the basement of his father's elegant residence. A car load of stoves was shipped to him on Saturday. The young man shows the real Chicago pluck.

—A rather singular account of the extremes of fortune comes from the Pacific slope. One of the early pioneers of San Francisco was William Ellis, a printer by trade. By his industry he accumulated quite a sum of money, which he sent to his wife in Chicago to be by her invested in real estate. In 1856 property in the latter place took a sudden rise and Ellis became wealthy. So he returned to Chicago, where he had resisted until recently; but he took it into his head to revisit San Francisco, taking with him his wife, who was a sufferer from pulmonary ailments. Soon after his arrival the Chicago fire occurred, whereby he was a heavy loser. While preparing to return his wife died. To complete his ill luck he was a passenger on a train which was thrown from the track, whereby he was severely injured, and he now lies at the hospital at Rochester.

LECTURE.—Mr. Black, a Teacher in the Peterboro High School, will deliver a Lecture in the Music Hall, on Friday even'g, 8th of December. The proceeds will be in aid of the St. John's Church Sabbath School.

The Fergus Record says that some missing cattle supposed to have strayed from their owners, were found among a drove being shipped to the United States. The owner of the drove must have obtained them below first cost.

The Prince of Wales is dangerously ill of Typhoid fever, the same disease of which his father died; and in consequence of this there is great uneasiness concerning him. Rumors are that his case is more dangerous than published reports represent.

$2 WORTH OF MUSIC FOR NOTHING.—We will send three specimen copies of the Musical Times, containing over $2 worth of our latest music—to any address on application. Address, J. P. SHAW, Rochester.

The Pope will not leave Rome, as was rumored. He now declares that he will remain unless physical force should be used to expel him, which is not at all likely.—The King of Italy remarked, at the opening of his Parliament, that his Holiness would not remove.

PERSONAL.—We are pleased to learn that Mr. E. B. Edwards, son of Jas. Edwards, Esq., successfully passed his third years intermediate examination at Osgoode Hall, on Friday last. Mr. Collville, of Peterboro, passed his third years examination also.

$10 WORTH OF MUSIC FOR $1.—The Musical Times is furnished to subscribers for one dollar a year. It contains a vast amount of reading matter, besides from $8 to $10 worth of the latest and best music. Who that loves music can invest a dollar more profitably? Address, J. P. SHAW, Rochester.

The Committee of the Protestant Home acknowledge with many thanks the following donations for November:—Thank Offering from the Canada Presbyterian Church, $12.05; A friend, a bag of Apples; Mrs. Romaine, a parcel of clothing; Miss Hilton, a new dress and skirt for an orphan child; Mrs. Hamilton, lard and feet; Mrs. Shaw, honey and pickles, for a sick infant.

POOR LUNDAY.—We are informed that the prospect of loosing the trade of the north, by the construction of the Haliburton Railway, is seriously troubling the good people of Lindsay. While we must accept the good fortune in store for us, we can afford to sympathise with them. As the place has heretofore been rather wet, the prospect of being left high-and-dry, should not dampen their spirits. Cheer up Lindsay! the Grand Junction will enable you to trade at Peterborough.

TEACHERS SUPERANNUATION FUND.—Dr. Ryerson has favored us with a long letter on the much talked of Superannuation Fund, in which he defends it from those who oppose it as wrong, and not calculated to benefit the teacher. We cannot afford space for the letter, nor do we think that its publication would convince the opponents of the Dr's. scheme. His intentions are good: the only matter in dispute is, will his fund secure the end intended. Many teachers think that it will not.

MECHANICS INSTITUTE LECTURES.—Mr. Dixon will deliver the first of a series of lectures for the season, on Friday the 15th of December, in the Music Hall. The subject will be announced in a few days, by posters. We understand that the Directors of the Institute have made arrangements for a series of lectures during the winter season, and as they will necessarily entail considerable expense, we hope our good citizens will see to it that the Institute does not suffer loss in catering for the literary tastes of the public.

Bishop Horan, of Kingston, and Father Kelly, formerly of this town, have placed their names at the head of a list of a society of total abstainers. This is believed the beginning of a temperance movement, in the Roman Catholic Church in Ontario. We wish them all success in the good work. To Father Coyle, of Emily and Ennismore, and Father Stafford, of Lindsay, the credit of being leaders in this noble work is due. Already over 2,300 are on their lists of total abstainers.

A GENERAL ELECTION.—From little hints thrown out by Mr. Sandfield Macdonald and some others of his party, we may expect a general election sooner than we have been contemplating. Mr. Macdonald fears the result of the reassembling of Parliament in a few days, expecting an adverse vote. If this should take place, the people of Ontario may look out for another spring of John Sandfield. It would be well for the electors to bear these things in mind, and be ready. We merely throw out those hints lest another election come upon us unawares. In a short time we hope we shall receive the intelligence that all things are ready. There is no time for delays.

MURDER NEAR NEWMARKET.—A man named Travis, last week shot a neighbour named Johnson, while riding together in Johnson's sleigh towards Queensville.—From the evidence given at the inquest, it appears that Travis had been paying his addresses to a young woman, a cousin of Johnson, and that he, (Johnson), had spoken to her disparagingly of Travis.—On Wednesday evening Travis went to Johnston's and stopped all night, apparently on the best of terms. Next morning they left Johnson's house together in a sleigh, but had not gone far when poor Johnson fell, a victim to the vengeance of the prisoner for such a trifling offence.—Travis is about 19 years of age, a carpenter. He is now in jail awaiting his trial. After being taken, he said he was now satisfied.

POLICE MAGISTRATE.—Mr. D. G. Hatton, has received the appointment of Police Magistrate for the Town of Peterboro. Mr. Sandfield MacDonald, always mindful to remunerate the services of friends, is unusually so just now. The approaching session tells powerfully on his emaciated frame. He fears the attack will prove fatal. And anxious to make friends, of the mammon of unrighteousness, shall we say, is filling every office he can, ere his decease.

Personally we have not a feeling other than friendly to Mr. Hatton, and only wish that he may live long to enjoy the appointment, and trust that he will faithfull discharge the duties of the office when installed. He has been a zealous friend of Conservatism, and has now, we suppose, received the reward of his labour.

TEMPERANCE LECTURES.—We are happy to inform our readers that H. Squier, Esq., of Brighton, is spending a few weeks in the County of Peterboro, delivering public lectures on the subject of Temperance.—He is the regularly authorized agent of the Independent Order of Good Templars, and will organize temples wherever needed.—His success for the last three years in his great work in other parts of Canada is quite a sufficient guarantee that he will be no less successful here. Mr. Squier will speak in Peterboro The time however, is not yet fixed, but due notice will be given. Any localities desiring a meeting will secure his services by writing to D. Pentland, Esq., Peterboro.

MALE TEACHERS.

To Principal	$300
First Teacher in Common School	700
2nd " "	600
3rd " "	500

FEMALE TEACHERS.

First Teacher	$280
Second "	240
Third "	220
Fourth "	200
Fifth "	180
Sixth "	160

The Male Teachers are valued much higher than the Female Teachers, if any judgment can be formed from the great difference in salaries.

ANOTHER FIRE ENGINE.—The Messrs Silsby have brought another Steam Fire Engine, stronger and of greater capacity than the former one, which after a very fair test has been accepted by the Committee. On Tuesday the Engine was tried in regard to the distance it can throw a stream of water. Ten lbs. of steam were generated in three minutes; 20 lbs. in four minutes; and 30 lbs. in five minutes, when water began to run from the nozzle. Through an 1¼ inch nozzle the water was forced 134 feet sufficient for fire purposes. This test was with fifty feet of hose. Through 1⅛ inch nozzle, water was forced 205 feet. Then three branches were used at once, and very nice streams were kept up with force enough to play on any ordinary fire. A trial was next made with 1000 feet of hose, which reached from Helm's Foundry round the Bank of Toronto and east of the Market House, and several yards into the market square. At this point water was forced over the Market House and bell tower, several jets going as high as the flag staff. We believe the committee are satisfied with the new engine, and have paid Messrs. Silsby the full price as agreed.

Progress.

Mr. Fowler has a large gang of men at work at the north end of the town. Already a large embankment is made approaching the crossing of the Lakefield branch of the Midland Railway; and the bridge is nearly half constructed. The road to Bobcaygeon will be 21 feet above the Midland road.—The bridge across the Otonabee river above Dickson's pond is being constructed, we understand, and another gang of men has commenced work at Bobcaygeon.

From the Cobourg papers we learn that everything is perfected in regard to reopening the road from Cobourg to Peterboro. Workmen are making ready for filling in Rice Lake, and all things appear favorable to the resuscitation of the road. The American Company has agreed to give $100,000 for the purpose, and Cobourg has over $50,000 which she promises. Hence we may almost look upon its completion as a certainty.

The survey of the Grand Junction is also being proceeded with. The stakes placed by the surveying party pass through the south part of Ashburnham, south of the Little Lake Cemetery and to west of the town toward the ravine of Dickson's Mill, on the way to Lindsay, &c. There can be no doubt but that the Company is making a grand mistake in going to that town, instead of taking the line of the Haliburton Road to Bobcaygeon, and thence to Fenelon Falls and Georgian Bay. And we understand that Mr. Fowler, who now controls the charter of the Haliburton road, is willing to come to terms with them in references to their running over his road to Bobcaygeon.

The Belleville people are a little remiss, and this very thing causes the people everywhere to lose confidence in them. They did not commence like men who were in earnest, and when Mr. Fowler offered to build their road and lease it, they foolishly rejected his offer, and sent him away.—Parties near home had some axes to grind, and to this may be traced all the hesitancy and uncertainty that they have manifested.

There is room, however, for both the Cobourg road and the Grand Junction.—There will be work enough for both when constructed, if that should ever be, which we must wait and see. In the mean time surveying parties are at work. The party that left Peterboro sometime since must be near to Lindsay by this time.

Railway Opposition.

A Town divided against itself cannot prosper, any more than a house divided against itself. Our readers will remember that during the last four or five years, numerous railway meetings have been held in this Town, and at every one of them the unmistakeable expression of the people was in favor of more railway communication with the front and northward. The people felt that the one railway was either unable or unwilling to accommodate the merchants in carrying away the produce of our mills and of the farms, and continuous complaints were pouring into our ears daily that people must leave Peterboro, or get under the wing of a favored few, if they ever hoped to get their lumber, flour, grain and other merchandise removed at the proper seasons to suit the rising or falling markets. At the time that Messrs. Ludgate & McDougal talked of commencing building at Harwood several meetings were held, and the existing railway policy spoken against, and, if our memory serves us, no gentleman attending those meetings spoke more strongly against the Port Hope and Peterboro Railway management than the present Editor of the Review, who was up to that time, or nearly so, in the milling and grain business. It is due to him, however, to say that at that time he was not Editor of the Review

A simple arithmetical question now arises out of his changed position, in reference to the Haliburton Railroad:

"If it paid the Midland Railway Company to pay $17,000 in order to buy off the Cobourg road from carrying freight to Harwood," how much would that Company be likely to give to prevent the construction of the road to Bobcaygeon: and how much would it give to secure opposition in the Town of Peterboro?

It is a well known fact that up to the time Mr. Fowler paid Mr. Carnegie and others the sum $735 for the expenses of a charter and advocacy of the Haliburton Railroad, the latter gentleman appeared an earnest Advocate of the Haliburton road, and the question naturally arises, why [illegible] paid the Midland Company to pay $17,000 to prevent the "Maggie Hales"—a worthless steam scow—carrying a little freight from Harwood to Peterboro, how much would they give to prevent the passing of the By-law to ensure the construction of the road to Bobcaygeon, that will most undoubtedly take the carrying of 40,000,000 feet of lumber from them? The merchants and consumers of Peterboro may reasonably ask also, who paid those $17,000. Was it not the people of Peterboro in increased rates? Increased rates were put on almost everything that we received, and on everthing that was sent away; and to these increased rates is due the fact that the Campbell & Huston and McDougall & Ludgate Mills are now at Harwood instead of at Peterboro, by which the trade of the Town of Peterboro is robbed of the outlay of about $300 a day during six months of the year, representing a trade to the Town of at least $60,000. It is well known what opposition the movement to revive the Cobourg road or to secure another road to the front then received—but boys cannot always tell how much is paid to secure opposition.

The large and influential Railway Committee that was appointed last summer to secure more railway communication, passed the following resolution at one of its sittings, at which a sub-committee reported in reference to an interview with Col. Chamblias and the people of Cobourg:—

"Moved by W. H. Scott, seconded by Jas. Stevenson, Whereas the Cobourg Peterboro and Marmora Railway and Mining Company have proposed to this committee, That in the event of the Town of Peterboro securing the construction of an Iron Rail to Chemong Lake, and of securing the exclusive use thereof to the said C. P. & M. R. and M. Co., as against any rival road to the front the said C. P. & M. R. and M. Co will conduct their road into the Town of Peterborough so as to connect with such road to the lake.

And whereas in opinion of this committee the construction of such roads would greatly conduce to the prosperity of the Town of Peterborough.

Resolved that this committee would recommend the granting of a bonus to the Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Co. not exceeding $75,000 exclusive of the Government grant, payable from time to time in Town debentures, as the work progresses, upon the said Haliburton Railway Co. having entered into a contract with the said C. P. & M. R and M. Co., or other responsible parties for the construction of such road to Chemong Lake, for amount within the said sum of $75,000 and Government grant. Provided that such grant be coupled with conditions to be hereafter defined as to the exclusive use of the said road by the said C. P. & M. R. and M. Co."

The Provisional President of the Haliburton road, Mr. Carnegie, was present in committee when this resolution was passed, and made every effort to secure the money from the town for the construction of the whole road to Mud Lake, although it was, again, and again, asserted that nothing less than $100,000 would be required to build the road, and that only to the lake.

WHO CAN TELL.

The cause of his sudden conversion to oppose a less bonus for a road three times as long I can Mr. Dixon's boys solve that question? The people of Peterboro may rest assured that it will take more than a simple knowledge of arithmetic.

It is well known that Mr Fowler paid the provisional directors the sum of $735 for their services. A gentleman who was at the meeting informs us that the editor of the Review put in a claim for $100 for attending one or two meetings advocating bonuses for the road. Another question arising out of this may not be amiss. It is this:—

If his services at two or three meetings advocating bonuses, that never were granted, cost $100; what would his services have cost in expending $100,000 ($75,000 bonuses and $25,000 from Government) in constructing the road to Mud Lake?

The last Review intimates that the Midland Railway Company is prepared to buy off opposition at good rates, would the proprietor, if in the company's secrets, inform its readers whether or not they are willing to pay for opposition to the present By-law for a bonus to the Haliburton Road. Although we would not for a moment assert that they are paying money for anything but legitimate purposes, yet if the Review should enlighten the ratepayers, they, no doubt, would rather receive than give bonuses.

DEAR SIR:—You will favor by publishing the following answers to the arithmetical railroad questions in the last Review:

NO. 1—"A QUESTION IN ARITHMETIC."

"If it paid the Midland Railway Company, to pay $17,000 in order to buy off the Cobourg Road, from carrying Peterboro freight to Harwood, and thence to the Locks by the "Maggie Hales," and then by carts into town, for one year—how much will that Company be likely to pay Messrs. Fowler and Dumble to prevent competition for two years, not only from Peterborough but also from Bridgenorth and Bobcaygeon?

"Perhaps some of Mr. Dixon's boys will favor us with an answer."

ANSWER.—If Messrs. Fowler and Dumble hold themselves as cheap as the Peterborough Review they will sell to the highest bidder, which that valuable paper evidently feels the Midland Railway is. See Review of last and preceding week.

NO. 2.—"QUERY."

"Mr. Fowler, himself, admits that his advocacy of these railway projects means—money, so far as he is concerned. That being the case, we should like to know what is to prevent him uniting with the Midland Railway—provided that Company should offer him "better terms" than either the Cobourg, Belleville or Trenton people? And should anything of that kind "turn up"—and everything is possable among Railway men—how nicely we would have secured a second outlet."

ANSWER—If the moon were made of green cheese, &c., and a railway were built to it—(for everything is possible among railway men) you know, wouldn't the Editor of the Review be the first passenger, with land warrants from John Sandfield in his pocket for some "territory"? In confidence, Mr. Review, don't you really think the turn of the moon has something to do with your writer?

No. 3—"FRENGITS."

"It will require no very great stretch of memory, on the part of our readers, to recall the time when Mr Fowler was Managing Director of the Port Hope Road, and how he raised the charges on that road when he thought the time was opportune for him to do so. And yet his admirers ask the ratepayers, residing on less than 600 acres of land, to contribute of their hard earnings, $80,000, to build a road from here to Bobcaygeon, which will be principally employed in carrying lumber for Mr. Fowler's benefit, and with full power to so arrange his tariff as to practically exclude the merchants of Peterborough from competing on even equal terms with those at the southern terminus of the line. Surely the least we should have, for so large a bonus, is a guarantee that the tariff, from the front to Peterborough, and from Peterborough to Bobcaygeon, combined, should never exceed that from the front to Bobcaygeon. For our part, if we are to give a bonus for an extension to Bobcaygeon, and stopping there, we think we should have such a tariff guaranteed as would give us a decided advantage.

Without some such provision, what return is the Town of Peterborough to receive for this $80,000? Echo answers, what?"

ANSWER.—If "Echo answer what"—What more does the Review want to so silly a query? The tariff from the Front to Peterboro and from Peterboro to Bobcaygeon cannot be greater than from the Front to Bobcaygeon, because, you know, Mr. Review, "The whole is equal to the sum of its parts." See axioms of Euclid—Oh! I forgot, your man didn't get past fractions, did he? Honestly now, Mr. Review, would there be much trouble you if your Editor was "the Peterboro and Haliburton Railway Company," as, with the aid of Port Hope and Mr. Cowen, he fondly hoped to have been. But, remember, "the schemes of mice and man gang aft agles."

No. 4—"QUESTION OF GUAGE."

"A year ago, when a committee of the citizens were considering the conditions to be attached to the then By-law for $40,000, great stress was laid upon the provision requiring the Company to build their road beyond Mud Lake of a different guage from that of those coming into Peterborough, in order that the terminus of this road should be in Peterborough—not in Port Hope, Cobourg or Belleville. They then very properly considered that if Peterborough was to contribute largely of its means towards its construction, it was their duty to see that it was built under such conditions as would be most likely to make it contribute to the prosperity and growth of this town, and they thought this would be best attained by making Peterborough the southern terminus, and consequently the base from whence all the supplies carried in by this road should be drawn. Now, however, all this is changed,—those who hesitated to vote $40,000 a year ago, are now, it seems, prepared to vote as much more for a road stopping at Bobcaygeon, and upon which Peterborough will be a way station, with no advantage, and possibly some disadvantages, in attempting to retain—much less increase—our trade with the north. No doubt the scheme is a good one for those who look for their returns in the earnings of the road, but we must confess we fail to see where the indirect returns, which are to compensate Peterborough for her outlay, are to come from, under such a scheme.

"We should have much pleasure in making room in these columns for communications from those who may think they can demonstrate that we take a too gloomy view of the prospect."

ANSWER.—Do you think, Sir, that a change of guage at Peterboro, causing delay, handling, breakage, waste, annoyance, re-handling of lumber, wheat, &c., would make our railway a popular route? If so, would it not be well to break guage once at the North Ward and then again at the South Ward, and give both wards a chance? If breaking guage is good, wouldn't more of it be better? How stupid it is of all the great railways to be inviting trade by painting on their cars, "no change of cars." You say, "no doubt the scheme is a good one for those who look for their returns in the earnings of the road." I understand you now, Sir, I am a little thick, and hardly got it at first. You mean, Sir, that it will secure plenty of trade for the road, and that this will be bad for the town—or in other words, that it would be better for the town if there were no trade for the road. Just so, Sir, Port Hope inspired that wise conclusion, but some way our people don't go to Port Hope for their inspiration, and consequently we can't see it. As for the "gloom" which troubles you, Sir, just rub the palm o' your hand with a little extract of P. H. B, and the gloom will lift.

No. 5—"FOOD FOR REFLECTION."

"Just now, when ratepayers have reason to appreciate the trifling (?) demands for taxes, being made upon them by the collectors, we are sure they will most cheerfully vote for the proposed additional bonus to Mr. Fowler on the 19th of next month. The taxes of the town are just now so very moderate (?) that it is not to be wondered at, that many desire to increase them. Our only wonder is, that amount asked, is not considerably larger, because the "increase of our present taxes by one third (that is $4 for every now one paid) for at the least the next forty years," is quite insufficient to enable our citizens to fully appreciate the luxury of taxation—so to afford a reasonable compensation to Mr. Fowler for his liberal expenditure in Champagne, Music, Lunches, &c., &c."

ANSWER.—"Food for reflection"—Ah! Mr Review—Are you not troubled at the reflection that you are largely responsible for driving away Ludgate's mills, and Campbell's mills, and for building up Fenelon and Bobcaygeon, by preventing the building of the road to Mud Lake four years ago. We reflect on these things, and we think your inspiration is just the same now as it was then. We also reflect that you kept quiet on the Railway question until you got the lot of money out of Fowler the other day, and then you came out bold for the Midland.

We do reflect, and we remember that Railways made Peterboro—that the taxes for the branch are not felt, because property and rents are three times as high as they were—and work is plenty, wages good, and pay sure. And we know that our railway will not stop till it reaches Georgian Bay, and that the supplies for the Ottawa lumbermen will be bought in Peterboro, and will go out to Bobcaygeon en route to the north, summer and winter, and Lindsay will be left high and dry, and that Peterboro is bound to be a city in spite of Croakers. So hurrah for the By-law.

ONE OF MR. DIXON'S BOYS.

"Immigration."

We have received the following letter which we publish for the benefit of our readers, and to let them know what outsiders think of the Canadian government.

SIR,—Our last party has just sailed, and Emmigration season for this year has closed with satisfaction to all parties.

The quantity is smaller; the quality of a good description.

The great majority were friends and relatives of those sailed in 1869 and 1870. The seed sown is producing good fruit. I hear of several Immigration Clubs started in Canada.

I blame greatly the Canadian Government for their indifference to promote immigration.

Canada wants people; and since each adult male Emmigrant is worth £100 to the Dominion; it would be both economical and highly advantageous to expend next season, a good many thousand sterling in helping suitable Emmigrants to the Canadas. Whilst America, Australia, and New Zealand are benefited by helping the worthy Emmigrants, why is Canada behind hand? I hear that soon Emmigrants to New Zealand will be able to get there for only £5 each.

Last year I suggested a system of passage warrants, whereby settlers could get out relatives and friends at a cheaper rate; Young women (a scarcity in Ontario), might be allowed to have them for £4 each; at that rate I could send out 300 or 400 annually.

Free-ism, like other suggestions, seems to fall flat in the ministerial ears of the Ottawa, Toronto or Quebec cabinets. I grieve to say this apathy has caused many sincere friends in the Old Country to grow lukewarm in the noble cause. But most of all the most blameful Ingratitude of many, who now owe their comfortable homes, food and property, to being at first helped by kind-hearted friends in the Old Country. I would encourage all to write at once to friends in the Old Country, and send some of the dollars they promised to return, and so show gratitude for great benefits received.

At present work is good here, and consequently not so much call for Emmigration.

Personally I have directly assisted out 2320 persons (all this season), and except for the deadly drink, and unforseen circumstances, not a score families have failed. Most, thank God, are infinitely more comfortable than what they were in the Old Country—The free grants—the School system—the freedom—the holiness on the Sunday—and the brighter prospects are what are most highly regarded. Thank God I am very well, and sincerely pray God for Christ's sake will bless Canadians in general and all my Emmigrant friends in particular.

I remain,

Yours faithfully,

A STUCKEY HEMING,

Incumbent St. Paul's Clerkwell.

THE RAILWAY QUESTION.—It seems to us that a revulsion of feeling on the railway question has taken place in this locality. A short time ago the Bowmanville & Bobcaygeon line was "first favourite", but now the Peterborough & Haliburton Railway seems to be the popular project. The fact is, the people of Bobcaygeon and Verulam appear very anxious to have railway communication with the front, without—so far as the majority of them are concerned—caring particularly with what point the connection is made; and as Mr. Fowler promises, if a reasonable bonus is voted by this township, to have the cars running into the village by the 1st of July next, his project is at present the most popular one. There can, we think, be no doubt that Mr. Fowler is in earnest this time, the best proof of his sincerity being that he has put his own money—and not very sparingly, either—into the undertaking. He has nearly a hundred labourers at work between Peterborough and Mud Lake; he has paid for rights of way out of his own pocket; and on Wednesday morning last he started a gang of men at work in this village, chopping and clearing, at the projected site of the railway station on the bank of the river below Mr. Boyd's house. Still, railways have been before to-day probably will be again, commenced, and then abandoned; and knowing this, we restrain our enthusiasm for a while; but so far, it does seem—as the Merchant remarks in an article which we copy in another column—as if the Bowmanville people, by their "half-heartedness", had allowed more enterprising people to step in between them and the advantages they might have derived from railway communication with Bobcaygeon. —Independent.

Ireland.—The Belfast subscription for the relief of Chicago is reported at £5,000.—Very liberal contributions have been received from other towns in Ulster for the same purpose.

—The tenants on the Marquis of Waterford's property in the county of Londonderry are rapidly buying up their farms. The prices range from 30 to 38 year's purchase of the rental.

KINGSTON AND PEMBROKE RAILWAY.—According to the Kingston papers the Directors of this road had a successful conference with the Ontario Government. The matter of the Government bonus is satisfactory arranged the Government agreeing to give $2000 a mile for 40 miles of the road, and $3000 for the remainder, making in all about $480,000. Payment is to be made on the completion of each thirty miles.

It appears there is a dispute about Dr. Patton going to Belleville as Rector. A number want the Rev. Mr. Baldwin, but the Bishop will not yield. It is also stated that the Rev. Mr. Strange of Kemptville is going to Cornwall. The Bishop and the people are at cross purposes, and there is no knowing how the appointment may end, although if the Bishop has made up his mind there is no use opposing him. He is all powerful in patronage. Thanks to the people themselves, who placed the power in his hands.—Chronicle.

THE AVONDALE HORROR—A DEATH BED CONFESSION.—The Scranton Republican says:—Since the loss of Avondale coal breaker by fire, and the additional terrible loss of a hundred lives upon the effect upon the ventilation of the mine, there has been endless and fruitless speculation as to its cause, and the profound mystery which shrouded it at the time has since enveloped it, and while the story which reaches us comes from no authoritative source, it is still so generally circulated that we feel justified in giving it for what it may be worth. A man who lived somewhere near Grand Tunnel died from the effect of small pox last Friday night. In his last moments he said to those about him that there was something on his mind which troubled him, and he could not die at rest with himself until he told it. He went on to say that the Steuben (Avondale) breaker was never fired by accident, but that he was one of the party of six who fired it. Then giving his own name he undertook to give others, but could only articulate what was understood to be "Michael," when a fainting attacked him and from which he did not rally, dying shortly after. It will of course never be known what he intended to divulge, but he has certainly left enough behind him to to confirm the belief of some who held that the burning of the breaker, was through foul means, and it may open the way to find out whether there is any foundation for belief. And should investigation show there has been foul play, we hope that not a stone may be left unturned to bring the wretches, who could plan and carry out so dastardly and awful a scheme, to summary and effective retribution.

—On Monday night a terrible murder was committed at Carick-Springer, near Mornahy, county Meath, Ireland. Mr. Edward Bryan, a farmer had recently bought twenty-three acres of land. His nephew, Peter Bryan, aged twenty-two years, lived at one corner of the farm was a miserable hovel, which was formerly held by his parents, both of whom are dead.—Bryan had taken proceedings at the

FURS---ATTENTION.

The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in furs against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.

He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a sale guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.

The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.

I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as strangers, to the inspection of my furs, which are not represented under fictitious names.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as has everything remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as if has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the transpersons affections of the throat and lungs. As a protection against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although called Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the diseases of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of these here, or do more than assure the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As its name implies, it Ague Cures, as it does not all. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Bismuth, Zinc, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, it in no case follows any period. The number and importance of its cures in the acute ills, are literally beyond account, and we believe without a parallel in the history of American medicine; but pride is gratified by the acknowledgement of the service of the radical cures effected by this antidote, and where other remedies had wholly failed.

Unacclimated persons, either resident in, or travelling through miasmatic localities, will be protected by taking the AGUE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver into healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many truly remarkable cures, where other medicines had failed.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold by all the world.

PRICE, $1.00 PER BOTTLE.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, nor was ever any before so universally adopted into use, in every country and among all classes, as this mild but efficient purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is a more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cured them; those who have not, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and all know that what it does once it does always.—That it never fails through any fault or neglect of its composition. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of their remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cases are known to every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates, yet containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change these complaints disappear.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists, one who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

IRON IN THE BLOOD

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an ailment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and consequently the vital principle, imparting and sustaining the system. The enriched and vitalized blood penetrates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, enriching and purifying nourishment, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and hundreds cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

Little by Little.

When the new years come and the old go,
How little by little, all things grow!
All things grow—and all decay—
Little by little passing away.
Ripen the harvests of golden grain,
Waving and flashing in the sun,
When the summer at last is done,
Little by little they ripen so,
As the new years come, and the old years go

Low on the ground as acorn lies,
Little by little it mounts to the skies,
Shadow and shelter for the wandering herds
Home for a hundred singing birds.
Little by little the great rocks grew,
Long, long ago, when the world was new,
Slowly and silently, stately and free,
Cities of coral under the sea,
Little by little are builded—while so
The new years come and the old years go.

Little by little all tasks are done,
So are the crowns of the faithful won,
So is heaven in our hearts begun.
With work and with weeping, with laughter and play,
Little by little, the longest day
And the longest life are passing away,
Passing without return—while so
The new years come and the old years go.

Pink and White Tyranny.

BY MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

CHAPTER XI—CONTINUED

His coming and presence interrupted the lounging hours in Lillie's room; the introduction to "my husband" shortened the interviews. John was courteous and affable; but he neither smoked nor drank, and their was a mutual repulsion between him and many of Lillie's habitues.

"I say, Dan," said Bill Sanders to Danforth, as they were smoking on one end of the varanda, "you are driven out of your lodgings since Seymour came."

"No more than the rest of you," said Danforth.

"I don't know about that, Dan. I think you might have been taken for master of those premises. Look here now, Dan, why didn't you take little Lill yourself? Everybody thought you were going to last year."

"Didn't want her; knew too much," said Danforth. "Didn't want to keep her; she's too cursed extravagant. "It's jolly to have this sort of concern on hand, but I'd rather Seymour'd pay her bills than I."

"Who thought you were so practical, Dan?"

"Practical! that I am; I'm an old bird. Take my advice boys, now: keep shy of the girls, and flirt with the married ones,—then you don't get roped in."

"I, say, boys," said Tom Nichols, "isn't she a case now! What a head she has! I bet she can smoke equal to any of us."

"Yes; I keep her in cigarettes," said Danforth; "she's got a box of them somewhere under her ruffles now."

"What if Seymour should find them?" said Tom.

"Seymour? pooh! he's a muff and a prig. I bet you he won't find her out; she's the jolliest little humbugger th re is going. She'd cheat a fellow out of the sight of his eyes. It's perfectly wonderful."

"How came Seymour to marry her?"

"He! Why he's a pious youth, green as grass itself; and I suppose she talked religion to him. Did you ever hear her talk religion?"

A roar of laughter followed this, out of which Danforth went on. "By George boys, she gave me a prayer-book once! I've got it yet."

"Well, if that isn't the best thing I ever heard!" said Nichols.

"It was at the time she was laying siege to me, you see. She undertook the part of guardian angel, and used to talk lots of sentiment. The girls get lots of that out of George Sand's novels about the holiness of doing just as you've a mind to, and all that," said Danforth.

"By George, Dan, you oughtn't to laugh. She may have more good in her than you think."

"Oh, humbug! don't I know her?"

"Well, at any rate she's a wonderful creature to hold her looks. By George! how she does hold out! You'd say, now, she wasn't more than twenty."

"Yes; she understood getting herself up," said Danforth, "and touches up her cheeks a bit now and then."

Don't paint! Don't she! I'd like to know if she don't; but she does it like an artist, like an old master, in fact."

"Or like a young mistress," said Tom, and then laughed at his own wit.

Now, it so happened that John was sitting at an open window above, and heard occasional snatches of this conversation, quite sufficient to impress him disagreeably. He had not heard enough to know exactly what had been said, but enough to feel that a set of coarse, low-minded men were making quite free with the name and reputation of his Lillie; and he was indignant.

"She is so pretty, so frank, and so impulsive," he said. "Such women are always misconstructed. I'm resolved to caution her."

"Lillie," he said. "who is this Danforth?"

"Charlie Danforth—oh! he's a millionaire that I refused. He was wild about me,—is now, for that matter He perfectly haunts my rooms, and is always teasing me to ride with him."

"Well, Lillie, if I were you, I wouldn't have any thing to do with him."

"John, I don't mean to, any more than I can help. I try to keep him off all I can: but one doesn't want to be rude you know."

"My darling," said John, "you little know the wickedness of the world, and the cruel things that men will allow themselves to say of women who are meaning no harm. You can't be too careful, Lillie."

"Oh! I am careful. Mamma is here, you know, all the while; and I never receive except she is present."

John sat abstractedly fingering the various objects on the table; then he opened a drawer in the same mechanical manner.

"Why, Lillie! what's this! what in the world are these?"

"O John! sure enough! well, there is something I was going to ask you about. Danforth used always to be sending me things, you know, before we were married,—flowers and confectionery, and one thing or other; and since I have been here now, he has done the same, and I really didn't know what to do about it. You know I didn't want to quarrel with him, or get his ill-will; he's a high-spirited fellow, and a man who one doesn't want for an enemy; so I have just passed it over as easy as I could."

"But, Lillie, a box of cigarettes'—of course, they can be of no use to you."

"Of course: they are only a sort of curiosity that he imports from Spain with his cigars."

"I've a great mind to send them back to him myself," said John.

"Oh, don't, John! why, how it would look! as if you were angry, or thought he meant something wrong. No; I'll contrive a way to give 'em back without offending him. I am up to all such little ways."

"Come now," she added, "don't let's be cross just the little time you have to stay with me. I do wish our house were not all torn up, so that I could go home with you, and leave Newport and all its bothers behind."

"Well, Lillie, you could go, and stay with me at Gracie's," said John, brightening at this proposition.

"Dear Gracie,—so she has got a house all to herself; how I shall miss her! but, really, John, I think she will be happier. Since you would insist on revolutionizing our house, you know"—

"But, Lillie, it was to please you."

"Oh, I know it! but you know I begged you not to. Well, John, I don't think I should like to go and settle down on Grace; perhaps, as I am here, and the sea-air and bathing strengthens me so, we may as well put it through. I will come home as soon as the house is done."

"But perhaps you would want to go with me to New York to select the furniture?"

"Oh, the artist does all that! Charlie Ferrola will give his orders to Simon & Sauls, and they will do everything up complete. It's the way they all do—saves lots of trouble."

John went home after three days spent in Newport, feeling that Lillie was somehow an injured fair one, and that the envious world bore down always on beauty and prosperity.

But incidentally he heard and overheard much that made him uneasy. He heard her admired as a "bully" girl a "fast one;" he heard of her smoking, he overheard something about painting."

The time was that John thought Lillie an embryo angel,—an angel a little bewildered and gone astray, and with wings a trifle the worse for the world's wear,—but essentially an angel of the same nature with his own revered mother. Gradually the mercury had been falling in the tube of his estimation He had given up the angel; and now to himself he called her "a silly pussy," but he did it with a smile. It was such a neat, white, graceful pussy; and all his own pussy too, and purred and rubbed its little head on no coat-sleeve but his,—of that he was certain. Only a bit silly. She would still fib a little, John feared, especially when he looked back to the chapter about her age,—and then, perhaps, about the cigarettes.

Well, she might, perhaps, in a wild, excited hour, have smoked one or two, just for fun, and the thing had been exaggerated. She had promised fairly to return those cigarettes,—he dare not say to himself that she would. It was necessary to say this often to make himself believe it.

As to painting—well, John didn't like to ask her, because what if she shouldn't tell him the truth? And if she did paint, was it so great a sin, poor little thing! he would watch and bring her out of it.

After all, when the house was all finished and arranged, and he got her back from Newport, there would be a long, quiet, domestic winter at Springdale; and they would get up their reading-circles, and he would set her to improving her mind, and gradually the vision of the empty, fashionable life would die out of her horizon, and she would come into his ways of thinking and doing.

But after all, John managed to be proud of her. When he read in the columns of The Herald the account of the splendangerous ball in Newport, and of the entrancingly beautiful Mrs. J. S., who appeared in a radiant dress of silvery gauze made a la nuage &c., &c., John was rather pleased than otherwise. Lillie danced till day-light,—it showed that she must be getting back her strength—and she was voted the belle of the scene. Who wouldn't take the comfort that is to be got in anything? John owned this fashionable meteor,—why shouldn't he rejoice in it?

Two years ago had anybody told him that one day he should have a wife that told fibs, and painted, and smoked cigarettes, and danced all night at Newport, and yet he should love her, and be proud of her, he would have said, is thy servant a dog? He was then a considerate, thoughtful John, serious and careful in his life-plans; and the wife that was to be his companion was something celestial But so it is: By degrees we accommodate ourselves to the actual and existing. To all intents and purposes, for us it is the inevitable.

CHAPTER XII.

HOME A LA POMPADOUR.

Well, Lillie came back at last; and Jo conducted her over the transformed Seymour mansion, where literally old things had passed away, and all things became new.

There was not a relic of the past.—The house was furbished and resplendent—it was gilded—it was frescoed—it was a la Pompadour and a la Louis Quinze and Louis Quatorze, and a la everything Frenchly and pretty, and gay and glistening. For, though the parlors at first were the only apartments contemplated in this renaissance, yet it came to pass that the chambers felt themselves old and rubbishy, and prayed and stretched out hands of imploration to have something done for them!

So the spare chamber was first included in the glorification programme; but when the spare chambers was once made into a Pompadour pavilion, it so flouted, and dispised the other old-fashioned Yankee chambers, were ready to die with envy; and, in short, there was no way to produce a scene of artistic unity, peace and quietness, but to do the whole thing over, which was done triumphantly.

The French Emperor Louis Napoleon, who was a shrewd sort of a man in his day and way, used to talk a great deal about the "logic of events which language, being interpreted, my dear gentleman, means a great deal in domestic life. It means, for instance, that when you drive the first nail, or tear down the first board, in the way of alteration of an old house, you will have to make over every room, and come in it, and pay as much again for it as if you built a new one.

John was able to sympathize with Lillie in her childish delight in the new house, because he loved her, and was able to put himself and his own wishes out of the way for her sake; but when all the bill connected with this change came in, he had emotions with which Lillie could not sympathize; first she knew nothing about figures, and was resolved never to know anything; and like all people who know nothing about them, she cared nothing:—and second, because she did not love John.

Now, the truth is, Lillie would have been quite astonished to have been told this. She, and many other woman, suppose that they love their husbands, when unfortunately, they have not the beginning of an idea what love is. Let me explain it to you, my dear lady. Loving to be admired by a man, loving to be petted by him, loving to be caressed by him, and loving to be praised by him, is not loving a man. All these may be when a woman has no power of loving at all,—they may be simply because she loves herself, and loves to be flattered praised, caressed, coaxed; as a cat likes to, be coaxed and stroked, and fed with cream, and have a warm corner.

But all this is not love. It may exist, to be sure, where there is love; it generally does. But it may also exist where there is no love. Love my dear ladies, is self-sacrifice: it is a life out of self and in another. Its very essence is the preferring of the comfort, and the ease, the wishes of another to one's own, for the love we bear them. Love is giving, and not receiving. Love is not a sheet of blotting-paper or a sponge, sucking in everything to itself; but is an out-springing fountain, giving from itself. Love's motto has been dropped in this world as a chance gem of great price by the loveliest, the fairest, the purest, the strongest of Lovers that ever trod this mortal earth, of whom it is recorded that He said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Now in love, there are ten receivers, to one giver. There are ten persons in this world who like to be loved; and love ladies is a nobler attainment than all your French and music and dancing. You may lose the very power of it by smothering it under a load of early self-indulgence. By living just as you are all wanting to live,—living to be petted, to be flattered, to be admired, to be praised, to have your own way, and to do only that which is easy and agreeable,—you may lose the power of self-denial and self-sacrifice; you may lose the power of living nobly and worthily, and become a mere sheet of bloting-paper all your life.

You will please to observe that, in all the married life of these two, as thus far told, all the accomodations, compliances, changes, have been made by John for Lillie.

He has been, step by step, giving up to her his idea of life, and trying as far as so different a nature can, to accommodate his to hers: and she accepts this as her right and due.

She sees no particular cause of gratitude in it,—it is what she expected when she was married. Her own speciality, the thing she always cultivated is to get that sort of power over man, by which she can carry her own points and purposes, and make him flexible to her will; nor does a suspicion of the utter worthlessness and selfishness of such a life ever darken the horizon of her thoughts.

John's bills were graver than she expected. It is true he was rich; but riches is a relative term.

As related to the style of living hitherto practised in his establishment, John's income was princely, and left a large balance to be devoted to works of general benevolence; but he perceived that, in this year, the balance would be all absorbed; and this troubled him.

Then, again, his establishment being now given up by his sister must be reorganised, with Lillie at its head; and Lillie declared in the outset that she could not, and would not take any trouble about anything.

"John would have got servants! and the servants would see to things," she was resolved, for one thing, that she wasn't going to be a slave and a housekeeper.

By great pains and importunity and and offer of high wages, Grace and John retained Bridget in the establishment and secured from New York a seamstress and a waitress, and other members to make out a domestic staff.

This sisterhood were from the Isle of Erin, and not an unfavorable specimen of that important portion of our domestic life. They were quick-witted, well versed in a certain degree of household and domestic skill, guided in well-doing more by impulsive good feeling than by any very enlightened principle. The dominant idea with them all prepared to be, that thy were living in the house of a millionaire, where money flowed through the establishment in a golden stream, out of which all might drink freely and rejoicingly with no question asked. Mrs. Lillie concerned herself only with results, and paid no attention to ways and means.—She wanted a dainty and generous table to be spread for her, at all proper hours, with every pleasing and agreeable variety; to which she should come as she would to the table of a boarding-house, without troubling her head where anything came from or went to. Bridget, having been for some years under the training and surveillance of Grace Seymour, was more than usually competent as a cook and provider; but Bridget had abundance of the Irish astuteness, which held her to feel the genius of circumstances, and to shape her course accordingly.

With Grace she had been accurate, saving, and economical; for Miss Grace was so.

Bridget had felt, under her sway, the beauty of that economy which saves because saving is in itself so fitting and so respectable; and because, in this way, a power for a wise generosity is accumulated. She was sympathetic with the ruling spirit of the establishment.

But, under the new mistress, Bridget declared in virtue the announcement that the mistress of the establishment isn't going to give herself any trouble, nor bother her head with care about anything, is one the influen e of which is felt downward in every department. Why should Bridget give herself any trouble to save and economize for a mistress who took none herself? She had worked hard all her life, why not take it easy? And it was so much easier to send daily a basket of cold victuals to her cousin on Vine Street than to contrive ways of making the most of things. that Bridget felt perfectly justified in doing it. If, once in a while, a little tea and a paper of sugar found their way into the same basket, who would ever miss it?

The seamstress was an elegant lady. She kept all Lillie's dresses and laces and wardrobe, and had something ready for her to put on when she changed her toilet every day. If this very fine lady wore her mistress's skirts and sashes, and laces and jewelry, on the fly, to evening parties among the upper servant circles of Springdale who was to know it? Mrs John Seymour knew nothing about where her things were, nor what was their condition, and never wanted to trouble heaself to enquire.

It may therefore be inferred that when John began to settle up accounts, and look into financial matters, they seemed to him not to be going exactly in the most promising way.

He thought he would give Lillie a little practical insight into his business—show her exactly what his income was, and make some estimates of his expenses, just that she might have some little idea how things were going.

So John with great care, prepared a nice little account book, prefaced by a table of figures, showing the income of the Spindlewood property, and the income from other sources. Against this he placed the necessary out goes of his business, and showed what balance might be left. Then he showed what had hitherto been spent for various benevolent purposes connected with the schools and his estrblishments at Spindlewood. He showed what been the bills for the refitting of the house, and what were now the running current expenses of the family.

He hoped that he had made all these so plain and simple, that Lillie might easely be made to understand them, and that thus some clear financial boundaries might appear in her mind. Then he seized a favorable hour and produced his book.

"Lillie," he said, "I want to make you understand a little about our expenditures and income.

"Oh, dreadful! John! don't, pray! I never had any head for things of that kind.

"But, Lillie, please let me show you," persisted John. "I've made it just as simple as can be."

"O John! now—I just—can't—there now! Don't bring that book now; it'll just make me low-spirited and cross. I never had the least head for figures; mamma always said so; and if there is anything that seems to me perfectly dreadful, it is accounts. I don't think it's any of a woman's business—it's all men's work, and men have got to see it. Now, please don't," she added, coming to him coaxingly, and putting her arm round his neck.

"But you see, Lillie," John persevered in a pleading tone,—"you see all these alterations that have been made in the house have involved very serious expenses: and, then, two, we are living at a very different rate of expense from what we ever lived before—"

"There it is, John! Now, you oughtn't to reproach me with it; for you know it was your own idea. I didn't want the alterations made: but you would insist on it. I didn't think it was best; but you would have them."

"But, Lillie, it was all because you wanted them."

"Well, I dare say; but I shouldn't have wanted them if I thought it was going to bring in all this bother and trouble, and make me have to look over old accounts, and all such things. I'd rather never have had any thing! And here Lillie began to cry.

"Come, now, my darling, do be a sensible woman, and not act like a baby"

"There, John! it's just as I knew it would be; I always said you wanted a different sort of a woman for a wife Now, you know when you took me that I wasn't in the least strong-minded or sensible, but a poor little helpless thing; and you are beginning to get tired of me already. You wish you had married a woman like Grace, I know you do."

"Lillie, how silly! Please do listen, now; You have no idea now simple and easy what I want to explain to you is."

"Well, John, I can't to-night, anyhow, because I have a headache. Just this talk has got my head to thumping so,—it's really dreadful! and I'm so low-spirited! I do wish you had a wife that would suit you better." And forthwith Mrs. Lillie dissolved in tears; and John stroked her head, and petted her, and coaxed her a nice little pussy, and begged her pardon for being so rough with her, and, in short, acted like a fool generally.

"If that woman was my wife now," I fancy I hear some youth with a promising moustache remark, "I'd make her behave!"

"Well, sir, supposing she was your wife, what are you going to do about it?

What are you going to do when a woman to give your wife a sick headache, so that she cannot possibly attend to them? Are you going to enact the Blue Beard, and rage and storm, and threaten to cut her head off? What good would that do? Cutting off a wrong little head would not turn it into a right one. An ancient proverb significantly remarks, "You can't have more of a cat than her skin,"—and no amount of storming can make any thing more of a woman than she is. Such as your wife is, sir, you must take her, and make the best of it. Perhaps you want your own way. Don't you wish you could get it?

But didn't she promise to obey? Didn't she? Of course. Then why is it that I must be all the while yielding points, and she never? Well, sir, that is for you to settle. The marriage service gives you authority; so does the law of the land. John could back up Mrs. Lillie till she learned her lessons; he could do any of twenty other things that no gentlemen would ever think of doing, and the law would support him in it. But, because John is a gentleman, and not Paddy from Cork, he strokes his wife's head, and submits.

We understand that our brethren, the Methodists, have recently decided to have the word "obey" out of the marriage service. Our friends are, as all the world knows, a most wise and prudent denomination, and guided by a very practical sense in the arrangements. If they have left the word "obey" out, it is because they have considered that it does no good to put it in—a decision that John's experience would go a long way to justify.

A Thrilling Incident.

The world of fiction hardly contains a more thrilling chapter than an incident which marked the life of the late Rev. Mr. Lee, Presbyterian minister of the village of Waterford, N. Y.

Mr. Lee was sitting in his study about midnight, preparing a discourse to deliver to his congregation, when he heard a noise behind him, and became conscious that some one was in the room. Mr. Lee exclaimed: "What is the matter?" and, turning around in his chair, he beheld the grim face of a burglar, who was pointing a pistol at his breast. A ruffian had entered the house by a side window, supposing all the occupants were locked in slumber.

"Give me your watch and money," said he, "and make no noise or I will fire."

"You may put down your weapon, for I shall make no resistance, and you are at liberty to take all the valuables I possess," was Mr. Lee's calm reply.

The burglar withdrew his menacing pistol, and Mr. Lee said:

"I will conduct you to the place where my most precious treasures are placed."

He opened the door and pointed to the cot where his two children lay slumbering in the sweet sleep of innocence and peace.

"These," said he, "are my choicest jewels. Will you take them?"

He proceeded to say that as a minister of the Gospel he had few earthly possessions, and that his means were devoted to but one object—the education of his two motherless children. The burglar was deeply and visibly affected by these remarks. Tears filled his eyes, and he expressed the utmost sorrow at the act which he was about to commit.

After a few remarks by Mr. Lee, the would be criminal consented to kneel and join in prayer, and in that lonely house amid the silence of midnight, the offender poured forth his remorse and penitence, while the representive of religion, of peace, and good will, told him to "go and sin no more."

Nothing against the Commandments.

On one occasion I was on a race-course distributing tracts, and preaching the Gospel to the crowds of people who had assembled I met there a farmer, to whom I presented a tract. On taking it, he asked if the Ten Commandments were in it: to which I replied "No," but added that there was something in it still better than the Ten Commandments. The man at once threw away the tract, saying that he knew better than that and that he would have nothing that was against the Commandments.

I took up the tract, and came again to him, saying:—

"Well you are an honest man. You will not have any thing that seems to be against the Commandments."

"Yes sir," he said; "I have been always brought up to keep the Commandments, and won't have anything that is against them."

"Very good! That tract does not contain anything that is against the Commandments, but will you allow me to ask, What have you done for the Ten Commandments? How have you treated them?"

"Well, that's a close question. I don't know that I have done anything for them.

"But have you not kept them?"

"Kept them, Sir! No one can keep them.

"Will you, then, let me ask you another question. What have the Ten Commandments done for you.

"Well I don't know," he said, "that they have done anything for me."

"Oh, yes, Sir; they have. They have cursed you: for it is written—"Cursed is every one that continues not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them" (Gal. III 10) Therefore, Sir, as you stand on the race-course, you are a condemned man; and if you die this moment in such a state, you are lost.

I then read to him the above Scripture, when he exclaimed—

"It's a bad job, then, if that is true."

"Yes, indeed, it is a bad job. And what will you do to get out of it?"

"Well, Sir, I suppose by praying for it."

"Suppose I were to shoot you while you stood there, and kill you, what would the law of England do to me?"

"Why, hang you, to be sure; and you would de erve it."

"But, suppose, after I had been found guilty, I were to begin to pray to the judge to forgive me, saying 'I wish I had not done it,," would he let me off for that."

"No, Sir."

"But he ought, if I prayed for it."

"No; if you commit wilful murder you ought to be hanged for it."

"No; if you commit wilful murder you out to be hanged for it."

"Yes, because I broke the law. Well, do you see any likeness between your case and mine? You say you have not kept the Ten Commandments. Therefore you have broken them. And having broken, you are guilty. And being guilty you deserve the punishment of your guilt. You deserve to die. But now, someone came forward, and offered to bear the penalty of the law, and was accepted in your stead, and died in your stead, then you would be free—would you not?"

"Yes if anyone would do that for me—

But I don't believe any one would do it. I would not do it for another."

"Well, Sir, whether you would or not, there is One and that One is God's own Son, who has suffered death for those who have not kept the Ten Commandments. God gave him to be the sinner's Substitute—that is, to stand in the place of the sinner; and he has born the punishment of sin in the stead of the sinner; so that now there is nothing more to be done in order to obtain forgiveness of sins, but to receive Jesus as our Saviour, and trust in him. And I say to you, though you are a self-condemned sinner, you may be saved this very minute, as you stand there, if you renounce all your proud thoughts o' meriting something by your good works, and cast yourself, as a ruined, hell deserving sinner, into the arms of your gracious Saviour; for his blood can make the foulest clean—"his blood cleanseth from all sin." (1 John i. 7.)

"And is that in the tract?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Oh! I did'nt know such things were in it. I'll have it, then, again. I never heard anything so plain before. I'm sorry I came; and yet I'm glad."

And now dear reader, whatever may have been the result of the conversation and of the reading of the tract to this poor fellow, let me turn to you, and ask you affectionately—Are you trusting in the Ten Commandments and your own obedience for salvation, or in the Lord Jesus Christ, whose precious blood has made satisfaction to a holy God for our sins? Remember, if you are trusting in anything but the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation you are trusting in a broken reed, that will not serve you in the day of judgment. If you are trusting in your own good works remember the Scripture says, you are under the curse. (Gal. iii. 10,) and will assuredly be damned for ever. Whoever stan is accepted before God, must have a perfect righteousness, and that is to be found ONLY IN CHRIST.

Oh! turn, then, I beseech you, from every lie of the devil, and from all false religion, and listen to that word which tells you that —"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." (John iii. 16, 17.) These are "glad tidings" of great joy. Here is pardon, peace, eternal life for every one that will only trust in Jesus. God is offering them to you as a free gift. If you will not accept them you reject salvation, and are the author of your own eternal perdition.

Cure Your Horses.

It is to the interest of all who own horses to keep them in a healthy and sound condition; experience has proved that "Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy, is the most efficacious, it has been used by thousands who will cheerfully confirm this statement. For Heaves, Coughs, Colds, and all diseases which effect the wind of horses it has no equal, nor is it equalled as a condition medicine; it purifies the blood, corrects and improves the appetite, and softens the skin; in fact, so great is the improvement in the condition and appearance of the animal as to have led many to doubt if it could be the same horse. Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package—Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

For over twenty years "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers" have maintained their reputation for curing coughs, colds and pulmonary diseases. Those suffering or threatened with any of the symptoms of bronchitis, or any of the pulmonary complaints, should at once give them a trial. They give almost immediate relief, and if taken in time generally effect a cure. Remember that a common cold or cough, if not attended to in time, often leads to that distressing and fatal disease—consumption. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per box.

Persons afflicted, however slightly, with any weakness of the Chest or Throat, involving either the Larynx, Trachea, Bronchial Tubes, or the lungs themselves, should on the first symptom commence with "Fellow's Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites," as by its use diseases of those organs (even Consumption in its primary stage) are speedily cured and more alarming symptoms prevented.

Winter is now fairly upon us, and the teams are hastening to the lumber woods in various parts of the country. Our advice to every man who goes to the woods, be he captain, cook, teamster or any other man, is to take along a good stock of "Johnson's Anodyne Liniment" and "Parson's Purgative Pills. Many months' labor (to the employer) may be saved by this precaution.

A New York paper says that when a Bergen girl get kissed, the very calmly remarks, "Hans, tat ish good;" and when a Block Island girl receives a buss, she exclaims, with considerable animation: "Well John, you have wiped my chops off beautiful."

Bad enough to look and feel bad yourself; but no excuse for having your horse look and feel badly, when for a small sum you can buy "Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders," which given in grain two or three times a week, will make him look and feel well.

A BUNCH OF KEYS.—The key of the palace, sack-key; the key of the stable, back-key; the key of the convent, monk-key; the key of the kitchen, turkey; the key of the cellar, whiskey; the key for curing coughs, colds, front bites, sprains, bruises, burns, is the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," at 25 cents per bottle. Sold by all medicine dealers.

"Their name is legion," may be applied to the innumerable diseases to which the skin is subject. It would be well for those who are afflicted with apparently incurable ulcers, old sores, erysipelas, and eruptions, to use Graefe's Celebrated Salve, which cures in a very short time, cuts, burns, scald, flesh wounds &c.

MANUFACTURES.—The Citizens of the Town who are desirous of uniting in some measure to advance the Manufacturing interests of Peterboro, will please meet at the Council Chamber, to-morrow night, (Friday), at Eight o'clock.

The Prince of Wales is slowly but steadily improving.

The Family Herald is the title of a new family paper published in Montreal, at $1.25 a year.

The annual services of the Wesleyan Methodist Sabbath School, in Town will be held on Sunday, and the soiree on Monday evening.

Mr. A. H. Rackett Bandmaster, will give a Concert in the Music Hall, on Monday evening, 18th inst. A good programme is promised. See large Bills.

In the Eastern Townships ploughing was continued till the 23rd of November, this year, and on the 30th ult. the mercury stood at 10 degrees below zero—cold enough we should suppose.

UNION SCHOOL.—There was no meeting of the Board on Tuesday evening—no quorum. The members present were:—Messrs. Edwards, Stevenson, Toole, Dumble, McLelland and Edmison. Absent, Messrs. Clinton, Smith, Hall, Dunlop, Coulter and Dr. Burnham.

The weather has been extremely cold for the last few days; indeed for the last two weeks. Mr. Thos. Eason, of Otonabee, has kept a register of the thermometer three times a day during the past thirteen years, and he informs us that at no time during the thirteen years has the mercury fallen to zero in November until this year, and this year it fell to nine degrees below zero, but seldom before, to zero, until the middle of December.

The Fire Committee reported in favor of the appointment of Mr. James English as Engineer to the new Steam Fire Engine, at a salary of $150 a year. A room is to be fitted up in the engine house for him to sleep in, so as to be always ready when his services might be required. The report was adopted at the late meeting of council. The arrangements will no doubt prove satisfactory to the ratepayers. Let us hope that his services will be seldom or never required.

PERSONAL:—We have pleasure in recording the fact that Mr. J. B. Dixon has passed his examination for Barrister and Attorney, the latter without an oral examination, and our readers will see by this weeks issue that he intends to start business in our Town. His office will be opened in a few days on Simcoe street, where he will be ready to attend to legal matters entrusted to him, and we doubt not but that he will receive a fair share of patronage.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH PARSONAGE FUND.—The following amounts have been handed the Treasurer by the Committee of Ladies viz:—

Festival, Nov. 27th	$32.64
Sale of goods from Bazaar	15.00
The late Mr. C. Rubridge	1.00
A friend	1.00
	$49.64

SALES OF PROPERTY.—Mr. Stapleton sold by auction, on Monday last the following property. The prices brought were very handsome, no doubt the railway prospects of the town are already telling on the value of real estate. The half acre on Brock Street, owned by Jas. Campbell, Esq., with the two brick cottages, occupied by Mr. Bradburn and Mr Johnston, with the rough cast house in the rear, lately occupied by Mr. James, to Robt. Johnston, Esq., for $6,000. The one-sixth of an acre, East of George Street and South of London, immediately North of Dr. Harvey's residence to Dr. Harvey for $750. Two lots, of one-third of an acre each, South of Charlotte Street, lying on either side of the house occupied by Mr. Cassels for $300 each.

We understand the Review intends giving a history of railway proceedings during the past fifteen or sixteen years. We hope he will give a full exposition of the part that paper has taken in those matters, not forgetting to explain the cause of his jumpjim-crow in one week from advocating the Cobourg Road to advocating the Millbrook branch; and another to explain the motive power that induced him to support the branch, when $60,000 of the people's money was legislated away, the Editor of that paper managing transactions at Quebec.—He might also explain by what peculiar process he has been induced to denounce and oppose the efforts of the people to aid the Haliburton Company in an undertaking he so lately thought so desirable for Peterboro, and for which he thought it impossible for the town to do too much. Has he allied his interests with some other railway scheme, since his connection with the Haliburton Company has been so ruthlessly severed. Alas, poor Yorrick!

COBOURG RAILROAD PROSPECTS.—On Friday evening Col. Chambliss and Mr. J. D. Armour met the Railway Committee here and explained to them the arrangement now being carried out to re-open the road to Peterboro and extend it to Fenelon Falls. The Company have agreed to reopen the road to this Town, Cobourg giving $75,000 toward the object. Mr. Fowler to do the work. And they also agree to give $5,000 a mile for every mile built North and West of the Town of Peterboro, asking preference bonds for the interest at 3 per cent. The road to be leased to Mr. Fowler for 999 years on these conditions. To get the road therefore to Bobcaygeon the Company offer $5,000 a mile or $110,000; the Government will give about $3,000 a mile or $66,000; Peterboro is expected to give $80,000 in all. Already there is $256,000 almost secured, and with a bonus from Verulam and a little from other Townships, $300,000 or $15,000 a mile, and the Company has rolling stock sufficient for the road. The Cobourg road therefore looks like a sure thing.

POLITICS IS EVERYTHING is the motto of our Town Contemporary. He carried them into the County Council, he takes them into Railway matters, (perhaps some will disagree with us here and say something else inspires his Railway opposition) he has carried them into the affairs of the Townships too.

Mr. John Walton is a great thorn in his flesh. He is too honest a man for the Review—too straightforward in all he does. At a late election contest he almost defeated the Editor of the Review, and he fears a rival.

But seriously, good people of the Township of Smith, what has politics to do in your Municipal Elections? Do you not understand who is the best man to represent you in the Township and County Councils? Are you to be dictated to by the Editor of the Review who does not own a foot of soil in your Township? Are you such fools as to require to be told for whom you should cast your votes in your own local affairs? If so, we are sadly disappointed. For our part we have no end to serve in advocating one man in preference to another in any of the Townships, and much less so to serve any political object, or political supporter. We could point to men who are far from being an honor to the people sending them—men whose names are connected with little histories, that we need not tell, yet if the people believe them the best men to send, what has a man in the Town of Peterboro to do with it? But then the Editor of the Review will soon get politics into Church matters; and if he does not change his mind he will take them as far as the gates of paradise, but no further—nothing unclean enters there. Good people of Smith, show the Editor of the Review the way to mind his own business, and do you elect your best men.

SIR JOHN YOUNG—BARON LORNE, A STATESMAN—BUT NOT A NORLEMAN:—This is the last cry of the Tory Press—and in consequence they desire his salary cut down to the dimensions of the Governor General's titles, not to his ability as a statesman. What rubbish! Canada wants men as Governors, not nincompoops who may have the good fortune or misfortune to inherit rank and titles, often as valueless as the paper the Tory press use to convey their whims to those who may chance to read them. Any simpleton with a string of titles to his name is the man for them. Forgetting that—

"Rank is but the guinea stamp,
The man's a man for a' that."

The salary is large enough and too large for even the best of those sent as Governors—but so rely the good people of the Dominion are not lost to the fact that it is better to pay a statesman, than a good-for-nothing with a high sounding but worthless title, the possessor of which is often far from being an honor to mankind.

Railway By-law.

The Town Council at its last sitting introduced a By-law and read it a first time, to grant aid to the amount of $90,000 to the Haliburton Railway towards Bobcaygeon, Fenelon Falls and Haliburton.

This is to be the whole grant to that road, as it is intended to supercede the other grant as soon as this one is passed.

The conditions upon which this grant is to be given are nearly the same as before published, except as to running powers, and a daily train over the road continuously. This By-law will be again considered on Monday evening next, and no doubt get a second reading, and be submitted to the people as soon as possible.

There can be no two opinions as to the course the people should pursue in this matter. For years they have cried: give us a railroad Northward, and another outlet to the front. A committee was appointed to bring this about. They have almost succeeded now, and the people are called upon to ratify the whole thing by granting aid to the undertaking. By refusing to encourage the Haliburton Company now, the strong desire of the citizens to see a road Northward will be indefinitely postponed, and then interested parties will laugh at the manner in which the town has been gulled to throw away—a reality for an uncertainty.

The people of Peterborough have always been too much divided in railway matters for their own good, and they are again called upon to witness the same interested opposition to the welfare of the Town.—Lindsay now gets the trade that should come this way, and she will continue to do so till the road is built to Bobcaygeon and the Falls. This is promised to us by next July. Will we lose the opportunity? The Belleville road cannot be there in less than four years.

The Grand Junction.

The Directors and promoters of the Grand Junction Railway will hold a public meeting at Bobcaygeon, to-morrow. They profess to have changed their mind in reference to going by way of Lindsay, and now intend going by way of Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls. They hold out the wonderful bonus offered by Belleville as a guarantee of the sincerity of the promoters of the scheme. If ever they expect to get their road, Belleville will have to give $400,000 to $500,000. Just think of asking $75,000 from the county of Peterboro, while Belleville gives only $25,000 more. And then the Town of Peterboro was asked for $150,000 for the scheme—$50,000 more than Belleville was giving. Surely, the people of that Town must imagine that the ratepayers of Peterboro are very liberal to even entertain the idea a moment. It will require no less than $1,500,000, to build the road to Peterboro, if built. The distance of the proposed route is about 75 miles. Let us see their money basis for obtaining the road. Belleville offers $100,000; suppose the County of Hastings to give $100,000; Townships along the route, say—$50,000 and let them get the benefit of the $75,000 from the County of Peterboro, although that is very doubtful, and then give them $2,000 a mile from the Ontario government, they would only have $400,000, or just one-fourth of the amount required.

We would like to hear how they intend raising the remainder of the funds,—viz: $1,100,000. At least one million of dollars over and above the bonuses would be required to ensure the road to the town of Peterboro. Hence the chances of ever seeing a train running over the Grand Junction to Georgian Bay are very slim, indeed, so long as the Belleville people keep their hands so closely in their pockets. Let them vote $400,000 as a bonus, and then they will produce a little confidence in their proposed scheme. At present few will consider the people of Belleville in earnest, unless it be to induce other people to build a road for them. The $6,000 a mile given to the Haliburton road by Cobourg, is far greater in proportion than the $400,000 would be from the Town of Belleville to the Belleville and Georgian Bay scheme, which would require about $4,000,000 to completely it; and when built, it would be wholly in the interests of Belleville, as it would be of a different guage to any of the other roads, and hence, breaking bulk would have to take place at Belleville, thereby increasing the cost of shipping to the Eastern markets.

Emigration.

We published last week a letter from the Rev. Styleman Herring, which speaks for itself. The people of Ontario have been paying pretty dearly for agents, who have done but little that can yet be seen. The Governments of the Dominion and the Provinces have not set themselves rightly about the work. The right men have not been selected as agents, and it is believed that the Dominion Government is more friendly to a French immigration than to immigration from Great Britain or Ireland. One thing is certain, that Mr. Herring is not slow to tell us that there is remissness, and to lay it to the charge of those in power, too. What have John A. and Cartier done in the matter? Meetings have been held, but what have they done at them? Have not Miss Rye and Miss McPherson done more than all the agents the Canadian Governments have sent home? Should not these agents therefore be re-called at once, and save the expense to the country, and let a few women be authorised to take their places.

The policy of the party has been a do-nothing one, nor need we expect anything better while they occupy the position they do.

Mr. Herring, who is accustomed to honesty and sincerity in the management of public business, may well wonder why the people of the Dominion permit such men to retain office. By the "No Party" cry, and loud promises of better conduct, they succeeded in inducing the electors to return them to power five years ago, but their days are fast coming to an end. If the people do their duty at the approaching election they will rid themselves of the incubus of the McDonalds and Cartiers, and put men of probity and integrity in their places, by which, they will save the Dominion from the charge of indifference to, and mismanagement of their public affairs.

Already the creatures of John A. are secretly at work, not only round the Town and through the County, but using every means to again secure the loaves and fishes, for that is all they desire. We need hardly tell our readers that a determined effort is now being made to secure the return of the same incapable gentlemen, (or any other gentlemen who will sell themselves to Cartier), who have misrepresented this County for the past five years. The electors of the County should, therefore, not be unmindful of the wily, crafty men they have to deal with, and be prepared for any emergency. We advise holding a meeting and forming a Central committee to watch the turn the grinding stone may make.—There should be a Central committee which would be in a position to call a convention for consultation, at any moment. The people of Ontario have the High Joint Commission before them. Intercolonial management and Manitoba mismanagement all in their mind, and now that even from London, England, they are being reminded of the worse than silly attempts of Cartier & Co'y to induce immigration, they cannot but see the necessity for prompt and decided action.

St. Andrew's Society Dinner.

The annual dinner of the above Society came off in Caisse's Hotel on Thursday evening last. The room was neatly decorated with appropriate mottoes, banners and national stripes of various hues. The spread was in Mr. Turver's best style. About seventy-five to eighty persons sat down to the repast, ample justice to the good things provided.

The President of the Society offered a friendly greeting to all representatives of sister societies and guests—remarking that their annual gathering was not to give vent to feelings of clannishness, or expressions against their fellow countrymen of either English or Irish nationality, but to hear the songs of Auld Scotia - and of the noble deeds of her sons in days gone by. Nor would they be unmindful of the glorious days yet to come, when,

"Man to man the world o'er,
Should brother be and a' that,"

He then gave "The Queen," passing a merited tribute of praise upon her as a woman and as Queen. Then followed the "Prince and Princess of Wales" and other members of the Royal family, some of whom had become doubly dear to the people of Scotland by intermarriage with a countryman, and a Campbell too.

"The Army and Navy" were also honored with a notice, coupling with them the Volunteers of Canada.

Dr. Kincaid and Ensign Johnston responded on behalf of the Volunteers.

The remarks of Dr. Kincaid we must reserve for some future occasion. They fully bear out the position we took a couple of years ago in reference to camp life.

Mr. Galletly favored with an appropriate song.

"The Governor General, and Lieut. Governor" was next given. The President in giving this toast remarked that we are a happy people, enjoying the greatest privileges. Left to govern ourselves after our own way, and this Sir John Young wisely did; and he hoped that Governors would long be renowned for good statesmanship, and the people of Canada for general intelligence.

Song by Mr. Mitchell, "Let us speak of a man as we find him."

The President then gave "The Day and a' wha honor it", very nicely referring to its origin, and the way in which it is kept everywhere.

Rev. R. McLennan responded in the most happy and eloquent style. We cannot attempt a report of the Rev. Gentleman's speech. It was frequently applauded during the delivery.

Mr. J. R. Ormond, 1st Vice President, then gave "Bonnie Scotland", to which Mr. J. F. Dumnicourn replied. Both toast and response being very fitly proposed and answered—referring to the beautiful scenery of Scotland, the bravery of her sons, to her poets and statesmen, and what Scottish song and valour had done for the people.

Jas. A. Hall, 2nd Vice President, gave "The Heroes and Bards of Scotland", complaining that in the latitude taken by the previous speakers they had nearly robbed him of all that he had to say, not even allowing him to return a piece of poetry but what they had used.

A. H. Campbell, Esq., responded to this toast.

Mr. Telford here read an original piece of poetry, which we will give next week.

Mr. Carnegie gave "Our Sister Societies and guests." Responded to by Mr. Blomfield. Mr. Johnston singing an Irish song, and Mr. Mitchell an English song.

The President then gave "Canada, our Home," which was responded to by Principal Dixon. He remarked that during the evening he had enjoyed himself very much in hearing the praises of the sons of "Bonnie Scotland," not a single sentiment had been discussed in any way calculated to offend. Every man had a love of country, and for his part he would say—

Fling my heart to Erin's Isle,
For Erin is my home.

There was something in the sentiment "home" dear to everyone, and Canada, cold as it is, has many happy homes. He referred to the fact that such countries as Canada always produced a brave and noble people, disputing the idea that cold latitudes never did, but remarking that even if so, Peterboro was within the limits in which heroes might be produced.

"The learned professions, the ladies and the press," were also duly remembered and replied to.

Mr. Carnegie gave "The President of the Society, Mr. J. Bertram," which was heartily received, Mr. Bertram replying briefly.

The party broke up about one o'clock, having spent a very pleasant evening with, "Happy to meet, sorry to part, and happy to meet again."

Ashburnham.

The Council met on Monday evening.—Present, the Reeve, and Messrs. Bennett, Burnham and J. Z. Rogers.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read over and confirmed.

A By-law to borrow $1,300 to enlarge the School House and to pay $500 towards the new Steam Fire Engine, was read a third time and passed.

An account of Mr. J. Craig for $40.25 was ordered to be paid.

A Petition was received from John Dunlop, asking for a Tavern License for the remainder of the year, and the prayer was granted, on conditions that the petitioner comply with the law.

A Petition from Mr. Gormain Brook was also received, and $75 were granted to aid in paying Dr. Kincaid's bill for medical attendance to Mark May.

The Council adjourned.

Town Council.

The Council met on Monday evening, pursuant to adjournment.

Present—His Worship, the Mayor; and Messrs. Smith, Edmison, English, Morrow, Doharty, Landy, Toole, Hopkins, Henthorn, Stevenson, O'Beirne.

The minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

Communications were received from Arthur Rutherford, Esq., informing the Council that he intended to leave next day for England; from Thomas Bradburn, Esq., asking for a portion of the Market Block, for the purpose of erecting a three story building thereon, on the same terms as White & McCullagh—referred to a special committee.

Two resolutions from the Railway Committee were read and submitted,

Petitions were read from James Hall and Cornelius Culling, asking for remision of taxes—both referred to Court of Revision; from Elizabeth Hogan, asking assistance to remove to Rotchester—referred to charity committie.

Accounts from William Helm, as engineer of New Steam Engine $92.05; T. Morrissey; board for a poor man, $24; R. Romaine, Lamps $130; were all referred to the Finance committee.

An account certified by E. Poole, as expenses in trying the new Steam Fire Engine, for $42.75—referred to Fire Committee.

Mr. Smith, as chairman of the Fire Committee read and submitted a report which was received and adopted.

Mr O'Beirne, Chairman of the Finance Committee, read and submitted the following report, which was received and adopted:—

"The Finance Committee beg leave to report as follows:—

They recommend payment of the following accounts incurred in connection with the late railway excursion to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon:—

Captain Wallis	$100.00
J. G. Huston	12.00
D. G. Hanthorn	12.00
Wm. Tierney	8.00
Mr. McGregor	5.00
Hotel, Fenelon Falls	26.25
Robert White	20.00
Mr. Turver's Bill	68.00
	$251.25

As to the application of Captain O'Donnal, requesting the annual payment of fees to the Protection Fire Company, for the past year ending 31st October, your committee recommend compliance with the request; but they would recommend to the council that it be referred to the fire committee, to examine into the present condition of the fire company, with a view to ascertaining whether the number could not be reduced. Your committee conceive that the steam fire engine, lately purchased, will not require so many men to manage it as heretofore.

In reference to Mr. Boswell's application, your committee recommend payment to him of $40, in full, for his service for the past year, it being understood that the Magazine is now in the hands of the Hardware Merchants of the Town, who are to make further arrangements concerning the same, and manage it as they may deem proper.

(Signed) I. O'BEIRNE,
Chairman.

Moved by Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Edmison,—That the application of Mr. Bradburn for a portion of the Market Block be referred to the same committee, to whom was reported the application of Messrs. White & McCullagh for a similar purpose.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Toole, Seconded by Mr. Henthorn,—That this council, having heard that D. G. Hatton, Esq., has been appointed by the government to the office of Police Magistrate, for the Town of Peterboro, consider the appointment premature, and not authorized by the statute, as the population of the town, according to the last census is less than 5,000, while the statute requires that number before a Police Magistrate can be lawfully appointed. And this council disapproves of the manner in which the said appointment was made, without reference to this council, and without any request proceeding from the council, and, therefore, they consider the said appointment unauthorized and void.

Be it resolved that this council do not recognize such appointment, or make any provisions for payment of any salary to a Police Magistrate, but that the Magistrate be requested to continue to conduct the business of the Police Court as usual.

Carried on the following division:

YEAS: Messrs. Toole, Edmonson, Doharty, Henthorn, Landy, Smith, and O'Beirne.

NAYS: Messrs. Stevenson, Hopkins, and Morrow.

Moved by Mr. Smith, seconded by Mr. Toole,—That the clerk of this council be requested to communicate with the Honorable, the Secretary of Ontario, as to the appointment of a Police Magistrate; that he would be pleased to inform this council at whose request the appointment has been made, seeing that the population does not come up to 5,000, also for copies of all communications relating thereto.—Carried.

On motion, a By Law was read a first time for appointing Returning Officers, for the ensuing Municipal Elections. It was also read a second and third time and passed.

Moved by Mr. Edmison, seconded by Mr. Toole—That By Law No—entitled a By Law to aid and assist the Peterborough & Haliburton Railway Company be now read a first time.

The By Law was then read a first time.

Moved by Mr. Landy, seconded by Mr. Morrow,—that a street lamp be erected at the Post Office, as soon as the gas company can erect the same.

In amendment,

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Toole,—that Mr. Landy's motion be amended by adding there to that a lamp be erected on the North side of Hunter Street opposite Mr. Henthorns block.

The amendment was lost, and the original motion was carried.

The council then adjourned for one week.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—

In the Peterboro Review it is stated that the Townships of Minden and Synnot received back from Mr. Fowler the little sums of money they gave towards the preliminary survey of the Haliburton Railway; and it further appears that the Provisional President demanded back the $100 given by Peterboro, and $100 given by Port Hope, and $30 given by Mr. Covert.

Now sir, I have often heard that Corporations had no bodies to be kicked, or souls to be damned, yet I don't believe that any of these municipalities would be mean enough to ask back their contribution to such an undertaking, or that they know anything about this matter, or ever authorized Mr. Carnegie to make such a demand.—Would it not be time enough to have asked back this money when the municipalities requested it. Sir, I don't like such tricks. There's a good deal of the Agricultural Society Secretaryship about that manœuvering. It may look smart to the Provisional Directors who held the Haliburton Charter till within a few days of its expiration, without doing anything; but to simple people who like to see something more than tricks, it does not look right that when a man like Mr. Fowler takes $130,000 of stock and pays $13,000 into the Company's hands, he should be opressed—down-in-the-manner like. If men guilty of such conduct think that they can influence the good people of Peterboro in the coming vote, they are very much mistaken.—We were prevented from voting on the By-law four years ago, but thanks to our Council we have a fair chance this time, and we intend to use it. We don't care a pin for the advice of the Review. We know Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Romaine, and we know that it isn't Peterboro they are working for, but Mr. Boulton and his railway. We are not to be caught with chaff, sir. Please excuse this long letter from

A MECHANIC.

Peterboro December 1st 1871.

FOR THE EXAMINER.

Reasons why I intend to Vote for the Railway By-law.

1.—Because our prosperity depends on getting the trade of our own County, if we fail to secure it now Lindsay will secure it.

2.—Because we can get it at so small expense. Cobourg by building the road to Peterboro, 30 miles, puts in $900,000, while we are only asked $20,000 to get twenty miles more to the North.

3.—Because a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. The Cobourg road with our help will be open to Bobcaygeon next summer. The Belleville road was surveyed 17 years ago and isn't built yet, and isn't likely to be—while 100 men are now working between Mud Lake and Peterboro, on the Haliburton road.

4.—Because Cobourg is doing her fair share of the work, but Belleville only offers a beggarly £25,000 towards the construction of a railway that will benefit her more than any other place.

5.—Because in case of the construction of the Central Railway from Montreal and Ottawa through Peterboro the peculiar inducements of the Belleville railway would be supplied, while the Cobourg road will give a more direct route to the States, our best market. The Central road we will get in good time.

6.—Because the greatest claim of the Belleville road is that it is a good point to ship square timber from. We don't want to see any more square timber go out of the Country. It is better to go in the shape of lumber.

8.—We don't want the road to stop at Mud Lake, because that would give a summer trade, while if it goes north to Bobcaygeon or Fenelon there will be trade all the year round.

9.—Because we will get an immediate benefit, while those who come after us and get the benefit of our labors will help to pay for it.

10.—Because, if the road gets to Bobcaygeon it will not stop there, no more than the Midland Railway stopped at Lindsay or Beaverton.

11.—Because Belleville, Port Hope and Toronto are all aiming to get the trade of our County, hence we think it is time we would do something to keep it for ourselves.

12.—Because I am quite willing to have my taxes increased if you increase the saleable value of my property and increase my rents.

13.—Lastly, because the newspaper which injured the Town by driving away the Saw Mills to Rice Lake, and which opposed everything that will keep the Midland Railway, is now opposite to Mud Lake.

Peterborough, Dec. 4th, 1871.

A Card of Thanks.

Mr. Editor,—Allow me, at my earliest moment, through your journal, to tender my most sincere thanks to the young people in connection with two of my appointments on this circuit, (Keene and Zion) who with the members of Christ Ch. made a most unexpected, yet welcome visit to the parsonage, on Monday Evening, the 27th of November, and for a few hours rendered us to make themselves as comfortable and happy as circumstances would permit, ending by presenting Mrs. Kines with a beautiful "Lockman" Sewing Machine, value $35; and also leaving with her a purse of $25; for myself. I deeply regret my unavoidable absence from home on that evening, being suddenly called to my father's bed side to see him die.

We appreciate this friendly visit of the young people, not simply from a financial stand point, but as an expression of their kindly feelings towards us, and an acknowledgement that though we might not succeed in all cases to win their hearts for the Saviour, yet they appreciate our sincere and kindly intention in toiling for their spiritual good.

JAMES KINES.

Keene December 5th 1871.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

SIR,—You have, doubtless, noticed a bitter article in the Review of last week, from the Editor, attacking Mr. John Walton, Reeve of Smith, as selfish, vain and egotistic, and apprehends "that when the ratepayers of Smith lay aside their personal proclivities, they will cast their votes for Mr. Garbutt," as Reeve, rather than for Mr. Walton.

It must strike any person as passing strange, how or why a resident of Peterborough, not even a ratepayer, I believe, of Smith, should take up so much space, and meddle so much with what is none of his business. It were a gratuitous slander on the sturdy yeomanry of Smith to suppose that they cannot decide who is the best man to fill the office of Reeve, without the officious interference of an outsider, and one, too, judging from the twaddle he writes and the fool he makes of himself, still on the wrong side of his wisdom teeth. It is clear from the animus running all through the article referred to, that it is not an anxious desire on the part of the writer for the good of the township that he is so desirous that Mr. Walton be ousted and Mr. Garbutt elected in his place. No, nothing of the sort. It is the old grudge against the former gentleman when he was his opponent as a candidate for parliamentary honors, together with Mr. W's straight-forward, blunt, outspoken manner in dealing with public business, as opposed to the low cunning and underhand method of the Editor of the Review. The two methods are as different as day and night, and hence the virulence and spite so conspicuous in the attack upon Mr. Walton. He makes statements and tries to make it appear that Mr. Walton's record in the County Council overbalances all the charge against him. "He wants everything for himself and his township" says this sapient writer, and yet he brings forward statements to prove that he does not. Mr. Walton did not want his township to pay less than its fair share of County rates, it was Mr. Garbutt who sought "everything for his township" by the writer's own showing. And then as to the figures, in 1856 we are told Mr. Walton, as Reeve, had the expenditure of $496 on roads. He spent $1.56 of this sum at the west part of Smith, $194 at the east, and 230 in the center of the Township on Mud Lake road. Two years afterward Mr. Garbutt, as Reeve, expended $117; $600 at the west, $500 at the east, and $180 at the centre. I really fail to see any selfishness here—both men, I believe made the appropriations fairly to the best of their judgement. It is only a prejudiced vision that can find anything to cavil at in the extracts "from the book" which we are treated to. The Editor, no doubt thinks he has made out a strong case against Mr. Walton—I am much mistaken if he is not pretty much all alone in his glory. There is enough of good sense in the community to reject such miserable claptrap—and so sorry an excuse for argument. Spite envy and hatred moved the writer, in his wretched attempt to "squelch" Mr. Walton. It will take something more than the puerile attempts of so paltry a pen as that used in the Review to lower Mr. W. in the estimation of the honest common sense people of Smith.

Mr Walton has his faults and failing like other men, and so has the Editor of the Review. I only wish the latter had a little of the good qualities of the former. Does he not know that his want of veracity at the last election was one chief cause of his defeat—at least so say his supporters. He talks about the "King of Smith"—but what about the "Czar of Peterborough" who undertakes to control the movements of the Globe, and from week to week wreaks his vengeance on the poor unoffending "Grits." But still all keep on the even tenor of their way, and will do so even after laboured attempts of the Editor of the Review to interrupt them have ceased.

Yours very truly,

The Small Pox.—A reporter of the N. Y. World has interviewed several of the Health Inspectors of that city on the subject of the prevalence of small-pox therein. Their testimony goes to show that the disease is wide-spread, virulent, and not unlikely to become epidemic. This is accounted for in great measure by the refusal of so many to have their children vaccinated, either through a blind prejudice against it, or a total disbelief in its efficacy as a safeguard. One of these medical men declared that a panic was necessary. People were allowing the disease to plant itself firmly amongst them and were too inert to make an effort to strangle it.

One of the Paris journals gives a very serious story about Madame Benedetti, wife of the diplomatist, and remarks upon the suit as law likely to arise from it. When French Consul in Egypt, the diplomatist married a young and beautiful Greek, supposed to be the daughter of M. Anastasi, a wealthy Alexandrian merchant. On the death of the latter it was found that the lady was only an adopted daughter, she having been a Greek slave when Mr. Anastasi bought her for her beauty, and reared her as his daughter. His whole fortune, amounting to several million of francs was willed to her.

The relations of the deceased protested against the will, but owing to M. Benedetti's position at the Imperial Court, made no attempt to brake it. Such an attempt is now to be made before the Republican courts and the case has been placed in the hands of two advocates at Paris.

Mystery of the American Lakes.—Lake Erie is only sixty to seventy feet deep; but the bottom of Lake Ontario, which is 502 feet deep, is 230 feet below the tide level of the ocean, or as low as most parts of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and the bottoms of Lake Huron, Michigan and Superior, although their surface is so much higher, are all, from their vast depth, on a level with Lake Ontario. Now as the discharge through the river Detroit, after allowing for the probable portion carried off by evaporation, does not appear by means equal to the quantity of water which the three upper great lakes receive, it has been conjectured that subterranean rivers may run from Lake Superior by the Huron to Lake Ontario. The conjecture is by no means improbable, and accounts, for the singular fact that the salmon and herring are caught in all the lakes communicating with the St. Lawrence, but in no others. As the Falls of Niagara must have always existed, it would puzzle the naturalists to say how these fish got into the upper lakes without some such subterraneous river; moreover, any periodical obstruction of the river would furnish a not improbable solution of the mysterious flux and reflux of the lakes.

"Dualin," Cundurrier not being found sufficiently explosive to suit the requirements of this fast age, nitro-glycerine was brought into use and now a new explosive called "Dualin" has been invented. An interesting account of what it can do was recently furnished by a correspondent to the New York Tribune. It looks like a mixture of sawdust and grease, and has a peculiar, faint and sickly odor. It can be thrown with violence upon the ground without danger and did not explode when fire was put to it in the open fire. But what its power was satisfactorily proved by experiment.

The Tribune's correspondent tells us that two pounds of dualin were laid upon the top of of the largest piece of limestone rock that could be found in the neighbourhood. The stone probably weighed between ten and twelve hundred weight. The powder was simply laid upon the top of it, with the wire, and covered with two shovelfulls of earth. The electric machine connected with it was carried to a safe placed on the other side of the field, and the operator merrely turned the handle. The explosion which followed was terrific. Strange to say, there were no falling fragments of rocks to be seen or heard, but only, after the sharp report, a small cloud of dust and smoke like steam. The effect upon the rock was to pulverise it.

Halifax, Dec. 4.—An extraordinary accident occurred on the Pictou Railway on Saturday evening, seven miles east of Truro. The express train from Pictou, with passengers and mails, was crossing a mud embankment twenty feet high, when the postal and smoking car became detached and rolled and rolled over the embankment, turning bottom up. There were three persons in it, Mr Levisconnt, postal clerk, John Carten, express messenger, and John Ryan, fireman; none of them were killed, but Levisconnt and Carten had each a stove piled upon him: the former was severly bruised and cut, and the later was also considerable hurt, Ryan was most uninjured.

The engineer and the rest of the passengers knew nothing of the affair for some time. After the foreward part had gone nearly a mile, the engineer looked out and saw the two passenger cars about half a mile behind following slowly from the momentum they had acquired. He reversed the engine and went back for them, and to search for the missing postal car. It was found to be on fire, and the inmates were trying to extricate themselves. The fire was got out, the mails were saved, and transfered to another car, and the train was in motion for Truro again in half an hour.

How the accident occurred is at present a mystery; probably the coupling broke and the heavy cars behind crowded the light postal car off and threw it over the embankment.

A Terrible Death.—A sad and extraordinary case of death by hydrophobia, consequent on poison communication by a rabid dog, was lately investigated by Coroner Schirmer, of New York, it being peculiarly interesting from the mode of its occurrence. It appears that Frederick W. Beetson, aged 41 years, a native of England, about four weeks ago was playing with a favorite spaniel, when the animal in return for the fondling and caresses of his master leaped up and beked his lip. Beetson put him gently away and thought no more of the occurrence until evening, when the began to show signs of great disturbance, giving rise to the suspicion that he was mad. Beetson then remembered that he had a crack on the lip, and becoming anxious watched the dog carefully. Two or three days after his fears were two fully confirmed, and though he tried to laugh off the anxiety of his wife, he insisted on having the dog destroyed by poison. A few days more elapsed and the man experienced severe head-ache, followed by unmistakable symptoms of rabies. His horror of water was extreme, and liquids of any kind could only be administered by covering his eyes. Dr. Hogan was called in, and he summoned in consultation Dr. Savage and Finnel, who administered opium, hydrate of chloral, and other remdies, but their efforts proved unavailing, and the unfortunate man died on Friday in great agony.—

WHEREAS, by the Act of the Second Section of the Legislature of Ontario, passed in the Thirty-second year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, incorporating the Peterboro and Haliburton Railway Company, it is provided that "it shall further be lawful for any municipality or municipalities through any part of which, or near which the Railway or works of the said Company shall pass or be situated, or which may be benefited thereby, to aid and assist the said Company by loaning or guaranteeing, or giving money by way of bonus, or other means to the Company, or lending municipal bonds to, or in aid of the Company, and otherwise in such manner and to such extent as such municipalities or any of them may think expedient, provided always, that no such aid, loan, bonus, or guarantee shall be given, except after the passing of By-laws for the purpose, and the adoption thereof by the ratepayers as provided by the Railway Act

And whereas, the municipality of the Town of Peterborough is desirous of aiding and assisting the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, by giving thereto the sum of Forty Thousand Dollars in debentures bearing interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, redeemable in the manner hereinafter mentioned, in addition to the Forty Thousand Dollars heretofore given to said Company

And whereas, by an Act of the Parliament of the late Province of Canada, passed in the Twenty-fourth year of the reign of Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, entitled an Act to consolidate the debt of the Town of Peterborough, and to authorize the issue of debentures on the security of town property and for other purposes. It is enacted that certain property of the said municipality of the Town of Peterborough consisting of the Town Hall and Market Block and the land south of Townsend Street and east of Park Street with all their appurtenances is vested in the Commissioners therein named and their successors provided for, called the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust, and that it should be lawful for the Mayor and Town Council of the said town, for the time being to cause to be issued debentures under the seal of the said corporation, to be signed by the Mayor, countersigned by the Treasurer of the said Town, and the Secretary of the said Commissioners, and to the amount, and for the purposes and in the manner in the said recited Act, designated, and that it should be lawful for the said Commissioners to issue new debentures, if required, from time to time, upon which to raise funds to retire outstanding debentures, and the municipality of the Town of Peterborough, should annually, upon the application of the said Commissioners, raise upon and from the rateable property of the said town, the interest and sinking fund requisite for the redemption of the said debentures according to the said recited Act.

And whereas, it is proposed to aid and assist the the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company to the extent and in the manner aforesaid, by causing and procuring the further issue of forty debentures, for the sum of One Thousand Dollars each, redeemable as hereinafter mentioned in the manner and subject to the provisions of the said lastly recited Act, as to their issue and redemption, and delivering the same to the Trustees, to be appointed under and pursuant to the first recited Act, to be applied according to the provisions of such Act in aid of the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway, Company.

1st. 3rd That such debentures shall be issued on the first day of January, —— and the interest the-on at the rate aforesaid, shall be payable half-yearly, on the first days of January and July in each and every year.

4. That such debentures shall not, nor shall any portion thereof be handed over to the Trustees appointed or to be appointed under and pursuant to the said Act, incorporating the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, and the Act amending the same until after an agreement shall have been made and executed by and between the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company and the Municipality of the Town of Peterborough, embodying such conditions and stipulations as the said Municipality and the said Company may determine upon, which said agreement, this By-law, and the said debentures therefrom to issue, shall be dependent, and then such agreement shall be handed over to the said Trustees, to be appointed under the said Act before or at the time of the delivery to such Trustees of the said debentures or any of them.

5th. That the said debentures when issued shall be delivered by the Mayor of the said Town of Peterborough to the said Trustees, upon such agreement having been entered into and concluded, and at the time or after the delivery of such agreement to the said trustees as heretofore provided.

6th. Provided that this By-law and everything therein contained shall be of no force or effect, and that no debenture or debentures shall be issued thereunder until the same shall have been paid, approved and made valid by an Act of the Legislature of Ontario.

7th. And it is further enacted that the votes of the electors of the said Municipality shall be taken on the proposed By-law, on the 19th of December, One Thousand Eight hundred and Seventy-one, and in the following places, that is to say, in each of the Four Wards of the said Town, and at the places of polling therein, respectively, of the last municipal elections. Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this extraordinary medicine enjoys is derived from its power, by virtue of which are truly cured those complaints, inveterate and severe of scrofulous disease, which the usual remedies, even the best of them, have been entirely powerless to benefit. Cases of Scrofula, Erysipelas, Ringworm, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Heart Disease, Pain, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Uterine affections of the female system.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Disorders are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are promptly cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute Directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammations of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Restless, Dependent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But scalds as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

FURS---ATTENTION.

The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in fare against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his fare, in finish as well as in price.

Montreal and Toronto showed good sample of dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.

He begs to caution the public not to take any white bags in Mink as a rule genuine Bags this year are not colored, as the desire of the public for dark Mink has no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the practice of coloring.

THE BAR.

BY D. X. JUNKIN, D. D.

His "bar" is always supplied with the choicest liquors.—HOTEL ADVERTISEMENTS.

Why call it a Bar? Say, whence is derived
This name for a depot of spirits of evil?
Was the name by some sly friend of virtue contrived,
Or, like the thing named, did it come from the devil?

Be this as it may, 'tis a capital name,
Short, easily said, and of meaning most pregnant;
And I rather suspect from the devil it came;
For e'en to his friends he is slyly malignant.

But what is its meaning? Why call it a Bar?
Because, prima facie, it bars from the liquor;
But that's not its full, honest meaning, by far;
Just jingle the money, the rum follows quicker!

I'll tell what it means—'tis a bar to all good,
And a constant promoter of every thing evil;
'Tis a bar to all virtue, that is well understood

'Tis a bar to all industry, produce, and wealth
A bar to reflection, a bar to sobriety;
A bar to clear thought, and a bar to sound health,
A bar to good conscience, to prayer, and to piety.

A bar to the sending of children to school,
To clothing and giving them good education
A bar to the observance of every good rule,
A bar to the welfare of family and nation!

A bar to the hallowed enjoyments of home,
A bar to the holiest earthly fruition;
A bar that forbids its frequenters to come
To the goal and rewards of a virtuous ambition.

A bar to integrity, honor, and fame,
A bar to friendship, and peace and connubial love;
To the purest delights that on earth we may claim,
A bar to SALVATION and HEAVEN ABOVE!

Pink and White Tyranny.

CHAPTER XIII.

JOHN'S BIRTHDAY.

"My dear Lillie," quoth John one morning, "next week Wednesday is my birthday."

"Is it? How charming! What shall we do?"

"Well, Lillie, it has always been our custom—Grace's and mine—to give a grand fete here to all our work-people.—We invite them all over en masse, and have the house and grounds all open, and devote ourselves to giving them a good time."

Lillie's countenance fell.

"Now, really, John, how trying! what shall we do? You don't really propose to bring all those low, dirty, little factory children in Spindlewood through our elegant new house! Just look at that satin furniture, and think what it will be when a whole parcel of freckled, towheaded, snubby-nosed children, have eaten bread and butter and doughnuts over it! Now, John, there is reason in all things; this house is not made for a missionary asylum."

John, thus admonished, looked at his house, and was fain to admit that there was the usual amount of that good, selfish, hard grit—called common sense—in Lillie's remarks.

Rooms have their atmosphere, their necessities, their artistic properties. Apartments a la Louis Quatorze represent the ideas and the sympathies of a period when the rich lived by themselves in luxury, and the poor were trodden down in the gutter; when there was only aristocratic contempt and domination on one side, and servility and smothered curses on the other. With the change of the apartments to the style of the past era, seemed to come its maxims and morals, as artistically indicated for its completeness. So John walked up and down in his Louis Quatorze salon, and into his Pompadour boudoir, and out again into the Louis Quatorze dining-rooms, and reflected. He had had many reflections in these apartments before. Of all ill-adapted and unsuitable pieces of furniture in them, he had always felt himself the most unsuitable and ill adapted. He had never felt at home in them. He never felt like lolling at ease on any of those elegant sofas, as of old he used to cast himself into the motherly arms of the great chintz one that filled the recess. His Lillie, with her smart paraphernalia of hoops and puffs and ruffles and pinking and bows, seemed a perfectly natural and indigenous production there; but he himself seemed always to be out of place. His Lillie might have been any of Balzac's charming duchesses, with their "thirty-seven thousand ways of saying 'yes;'" but, as to himself, he must have been taken for her steward or gardener, who had accidentally strayed in, and was fraying her satin surroundings with rough coats and heavy boots. There was not, in fact, in all the reorganized house, a place where he felt himself to be at all the proper thing; nowhere where he could lounge, and read his newspaper, without a feeling of impropriety; nowhere that he could indulge in any of the slight Hottentot-isms wherein unrenewed nature delights,—without a feeling of rebuke.

John had not philosophized on the causes of this. He knew, in a general and unconfessed way, that he was not comfortable in his new arrangements; but he supposed it was his own fault.—He had fallen into rusty, old-fashioned, bachelor ways; and, like other things that are not agreeable to the natural man, he supposed his trim, resplendent, genteel house was good for him, and that he ought to like it, and by grace should attain to liking it, if he only tried long enough.

Only he took long rests every day when he went to Grace's, on Elm Street, and stretched himself on the old sofa, and sat in his mother's old arm-chair, and told Grace how very elegant their house was, and how much taste the architect had shown, and how much Lillie was delighted with it.

But this silent walk of John's, up and down his brilliant apartments, opened his eyes to another troublesome prospect. He was a Christian man, with a high aim and ideal in life. He believed in the Sermon on the Mount, and other radical-preaching of that nature; and he was a very honest man, and hated humbug in every shape. Nothing seemed meaner to him than to profess a thing. But began in a cloudy way to appear to him that there is a manner of arranging one's houses that makes it difficult—yes, well nigh impossible—to act out in them any of the brotherhood principles of those discourses.

There are houses where the self-respecting poor, or the honest labouring man and woman, cannot be made to enter or to feel at home. They are made for the selfish luxury of the privileged few.—Then John reflected, uneasily, that this change in his house had absorbed that whole balance which usually remained on his accounts to be devoted to benevolent purposes, and with which this year he had prop sed to erect a reading-room for his work people.

"Lillie," said John, as he walked uneasily up and down, "I wish you would try to help me in this thing. I always have done it,—my father and mother did it before me,—and I don't want a bit of a sudden to depart from it. It may seem a little thing, but it does a great deal of good. It produces kind feeling; it refines and educates and softens them."

"Oh, well, John! if you say so, I must, I suppose," said Lillie, with a sigh. "I can have the carpets and furniture all covered, I suppose; it'll be no end of trouble, but I'll try. But I mustsay, I think all this kind of petting of the working classes does no sort of good; it only makes them uppish and exacting: you never get any gratitude for it."

"But you know, dearie, what is said about doing good, hoping for nothing again," said John.

"Now, John, please don't preach of all things. Haven't I told you that I'll try my best? I am going to,—I'll work with all my strength,—you know that isn't much,—but I shall exert myself to the utmost if you say so."

"My dear, I don't want you to injure yourself!"

"Oh! I don't mind," said Lillie, with the air of a martyr. "The servants, I suppose, will make a fuss about it; and I shouldn't wonder if is also she of sending them every one off in a body, and leaving me without any help in the house, just as the Follingsbees and the Simpkinses are coming to visit us."

"I didn't know that you had invited the Follingsbees and Simpkinses," said John.

"Didn't I tell you? I meant to," said Mrs. Lillie, innocently.

"I don't like those Edlingsbees, Lillie. He is a man I have no respect for; he is one of those shoddy upstarts, not at all our sort of folks. I am sorry you asked him."

"But his wife is my particular friend," said Lillie, "and they were very polite to mamma and me at Newport; and we really owe them some attention."

"Well, Lillie, since you have asked them, I will be polite to them; and I will try and do everything to save you care in this entertainment. I'll speak to Bridget myself; she knows our ways, and has been used to managing."

And so, as John was greatly beloved by Bridget, and as all the domestic staff had the true Irish fealty to the man of the house, and would run themselves off their feet in his service any day; it came to pass that the fete was holden, as of yore, in the grounds. Grace was there and helped, and so were Letitia and Rose Ferguson; and all passed off better than could be expected. If John did not enjoy it. He felt all the while that he was dragging Lillie as a thousand-pound weight after him; and only resolved that, once out of that e's festival, he would never try to have again.

Lillie went to bed with sick headache, and lay two days after enduring which she cried and lamented piteously. She "knew she was not the fe for John;" she "always told him I wouldn't be satisfied with her, and no she saw he wasn't; but she had tried her very best, and now it was cruel to thi she should not succeed any better."

"My dearest child," sa John, who to say the truth, was beginni to find this thing less charming than used to be, "I am satisfied. I am mu bliged to you. I'm sure you have e all that could be asked."

"Well, I'm sure I hope th folks of yours were pleased," quoth he; as she lay looking like a martyr, h a cloth wet in ice-water bound rou her head. "They ought to be; they ave left grease spots all over the l in my boudoir, from one end to the er; and cake and raisins have been ther into the carpets; and the turf und the oval is all cut up; and they b broken my little Diana; and such din as there was!—oh, me! it make head-ache to think of it."

"No, you can't. One of children broke that model of the Lean ower, too. I found it. You can't such children to let things alone. dear me! my head!"

"There, there, pussy! o don't worry," said John, in soothing is.

"Don't think me horrid, plea t," said Lillie, piteously. "I dry to have things go right didn't I?"

"Certainly you did, dearie don't worry. I'll get all the spots t out, and all the things mended, a ake everything right."

So John called Rose on his w n stairs. "Show me the sofa they spoiled," said he.

"Sofa?" said Rose.

"Yes; I understand that the children greased the sofa in Mrs. Seymour's boudoir."

"Oh, dear, no! nothing of the sort; I've been putting everything to rights in all the rooms, and they look beautifully."

"Didn't they break something?"

"Oh, no nothing! The little things were good as could be."

"The Leaning Tower, and that little Diana," suggested John.

"Oh, dear me, no! I broke those a month ago, and showed them to Mrs. Seymour, and promised to mend them. Oh! she knows all about that."

"Ah?" said John, "I didn't know that. Well, Rosa, put everything up nicely, and divide this money among the girls for extra trouble," he added, slipping a bill into her hand.

"I'm sure there's no trouble," said Rosa. "We all enjoy it; and I believe everybody did; only I'm sorry it was too much for Mrs. Seymour; she is very delicate."

"Yes, she is," said John, as he turned away, drawing a long, low sigh.

That long, low sigh had become a frequent and unconscious occurance with him of late. When our ideals are sick unto death; when they are slowly dying and passing away from us, we sigh thus. John said to himself, slowly,—no matter what; but he felt the pang of knowing again what he had known so often of late, that his Lillie's words was not golden. What she said would not bear close examination. Therefore, why examine?

"Evidently, she is determined that this thing shall not go on," said John. "Well, I shall never try again; it's of no use;" and John went up to his sister's, and threw himself down upon the old chints sofa as if it had been his mother's bosom. His sister sat there, sewing. The sun came twinkling through a rustic frame-work of ivy which had been the pride of her heart to arrange the week before. All the old family pictures and heirlooms, and sketches and pencillings, were arranged in the most charming way, so that her rooms seemed a reproduction of the old home.

"Hang it all!" with a great flounce as he turned over on the sofa. "I'm not up to par this morning."

Now, Grace had the perfect intuitive knowlege of just what the matter was with her brother, that women always have who have grown up in intimacy with a man. These fine females eyes see farther between the rough cracks and ridges of the oak bark of manhood than themselves. Nothing would have been easier, had Grace been a jealous exigeante woman, than to have passed a fine probe of sisterly enquiry into the [illegible] and Lillie were growing slack, and untied and loosened them more and more. She could have done it so tenderly, so conscientiously, so pityingly,—encouraged John to talk and to complain, and taking part with him.—till there should come to be two parties in the family, the brother and sister against the wife.

How strong the temptation was, those may feel who reflect that this one subject caused an almost total eclipse of the life-long habit of confidence which had existed between Grace and her brother, and that her brother was her life and her world.

But Grace was one of those women formed under the kindly severe discipline. The habit of self-examination and self-inspection, for which the religious teaching of New England has been peculiar, produced a race of women, who rose superior to those mere feminine caprices and impulses, which often hurry very generous and kindly-natured persons into ungenerous and dishonorable conduct. Grace had been trained by a father and mother whose marriage union was the holiest and most awful of obligations. To her, the idea of a husband or a wife betraying each other's weakness of faults by complaints to a third party seemed so nothing sacrilegious; and she used all her womanly tact and skill to prevent any conversation that might lead to such a result.

"Lillie is entirely knocked up by the affair yesterday; she had a terrible head ache this morning," said John.

"Poor child! She is a delicate little thing," said Grace.

"She couldn't have had any labor," continued John, "for I saw to everything myself; and Bridget and Rosa and all the girls entered into it with real spirit, and Lillie did the best she could, poor girl! but I could see all the time she was worrying about her new figgiga and folderols in the house. Hang it! I wish they were all in the Red Sea!" burst out John, glad to find something to vent himself upon. "If I had known that making the house over was going to be such a restraint on a fellow, I would never have done it."

"Oh, well, never mind that now," said Grace. "Your house will get rubbed down by and by, and the new gloss taken off; and so will your wife, and you will be as cosy and easy as an old shoe. Young mistresses, you see, have nerves all over their bodies at first. They tremble at every dent in their furniture, and wink when you come near it, as if you were going to hit a blow; but that wears off in time, and then they learn to take it easy."

John looked relieved; but after a minute broke out again;—

"I say, Gracie, Lillie has gone an invited the Simpkinses and the Follingsbees here this fall. Just think of it."

"Well, I suppose you expect your wife to have the right of inviting her company," said Grace.

"But, you know Gracie, they are not all our sort of folks," said John. "None of our set would think of visiting them, and it'll seem so odd to see them here. Follingsbee is a vulgar sharper, who has made his money out of our country by dishonest contracts during the war. I don't know much about his wife. Lillie says she is her intimate friend."

"Oh, well, John! we must get over it in the quietest way possible. It wouldn't be handsome not to make the agreeable to your wife's company; and if you don't like the quality of it, why, you are a good deal nearer to her than any one else can be,—you can gradually detach her from them."

"Then you think I ought to put a good face on their coming?" said John, with a sigh of relief.

"Oh, certainly! of course. What else can you do? It's one of the things to be expected with a young wife."

"And do you think the Wilcoxes and the Fergusons and the rest of our set will be civil?"

"Why, of course they will," said Grace. "Rose and Letitia will, certainly; and the others will follow suit. After all, John, perhaps we old families, as we call ourselves, are a little bit pharisaical and self-righteous, and too apt to thank God, we are not as other men are. It'll do us good to be obliged to come a little out of our crinkles."

"It isn't any old family feeling about Follingsbee," said John. "But I feel that that man deserves to be in State's prison much more than many a poor dog that is there now."

"And that may be true of many another, even in the selectest circles of good society," said Grace; "but we are not called on to play Providence nor pronounce judgments. The common courtesies of life do not commit us one way or the other. The Lord himself does not express his opinion of the wicked, but allows all an equal share of his kindliness."

"Well, Gracie, you are right; and I'll constrain myself to do the thing handsomely," said John.

"The thing with you men," said Grace, "Is, that you want your wives to see with your eyes, all in a minute. what has got to come with years and intimacy, and the gradual growing closer and closer together. The husband and wife, of themselves, drop many friendships and associations that at first were mutually distasteful, simply because their tastes have grown insensibly to the same."

John hoped it would be so with himself and Lillie; for he was still very much in love with her; and it comforted him to have Grace speak so cheerfully, as if it were possible.

"You think Lillie will grow into our ways by and by?"—he said inquiringly.

"Well, if we have patience and give her time. You know, John, that you knew when you took her that she had not been brought up in our ways of living and thinking. Lillie comes from an entirely different set of people from any we are accustomed to; but a man must face all the consequences of his marriage honestly and honorably."

"I know it," said John, with a sigh. "I say, Gracie, do you think the Fergusons like Lillie? I want her to be intimate with them."

"Well, I think they admire her, said Grace, evasively, "and feel disposed to be as intimate as she will let them.

"Because," said John, "Rose Ferguson is such a splendid girl; she is so strong, and so generous, and so perfectly true and reliable, it would be the joy of my heart if Lillie would choose her for a friend."

"Then, pray, don't tell her so," said Grace, earnestly; "and don't praise her to Lillie,—and, above all things, never hold her up as a pattern, unless you want your wife to hate her."

John opened his eyes very wide.

"So!" said he, slowly, "I never thought of that. You think she would be jealous?" and John smiled, as men do at the idea that their wives may be jealous, and not disliking it on the whole.

"I know I shouldn't be in much charity with a woman my husband proposed to me as a model; that is to say, supposing I had one," said Grace.

"That reminds me," said John, suddenly rising from the sofa.

"Do you know, Gracie, that Colonel Sydenham has come back from his cruise?"

"I had heard of it," said Grace, quietly. "Now, John, don't interrupt me. "I'm just going to turn this corner, and must count,—'one, two, three, four, five, six,'"—

John looked at his sister. "How handsome she looks when her cheeks have that color!" he thought. "I wonder if there ever was anything in that affair between them."

CHAPTER XIV.

A GREAT MORAL CONFLICT.

"Now, John, dear, I have something very particular that I want you to promise me," said Mrs. Lillie, a day or two after the scenes just recorded. Our Lillie had recovered her spirits, and got over her headache, and had come down and done her best to be delightful; and when a very pretty woman, who has all her life studied the art of pleasing, does that, she generally succeeds.

"John thought to himself he "didn't care what she was, he loved her;" and that she certainly was the prettiest, most bewitching little creature on earth. He flung his sighs and his doubts and fears to the wind, and suffered himself to be coaxed, and cajoled, and led captive in the most amiable manner possible.

His fair one had a point to carry—a point that instinct told her was to be managed with great adroitness.

"Well," said John, over his newspaper, "what is this something so very particular?"

"First, sir, put down that paper, and listen to me, said Mrs. Lillie, coming up and seating herself on his knee, and sweeping down the offending paper with an air of authority.

"Yes'm," said John, submissively.—"Let's see.—how was that in the marriage service? I promised to obey, didn't I?"

"Of course you did; that service is always interpreted by contraries—ever since Eve made Adam mind her in the beginning," said Mrs Lillie, laughing.

"And get things into a pretty mess in that way," said John; "but come, now, what is it?"

"Well, John, you know the Follingsbees are coming next week?"

"I know it," said John, looking amiable and conciliatory.

"Well, dear, there are some things about our establishment that are not just as I should feel pleased to receive them to."

"Ah!" said John; "why Lillie, I thought we were fine as a fiddle, from the top of the house to the bottom."

"Oh! it's not the house; the house is splendid. I shouldn't be in the least ashamed to show it to anybody; but about the table arrangements."

"Now, really, Lillie, what can one have more than real old china and heavy silver plate? I rather pique myself on that; I think it has quite a good, rich, solid old air."

"Well, John, to say the truth, why do we never have any wine? I don't care for it,—I never drink it; but the decanters, and the different colored glasses, and all the apparatus, are such an adornment; and then the Follingsbees are such judges of wine.—He imports his own from Spain."

John's face had been hardening down into a firm, decided look, while Lillie, stroking his whiskers and playing with his collar, went on with this address.

At last he said, "Lillie, I have done almost everything you ever asked; but this one thing I cannot do,—it is a matter of principle. I never drink wine, never have it on my table, never give it, because I have pledged myself not to do it."

"Well, Lillie, I suppose you will call it so," said John; "but listen to me patiently. My father and I labored for a long time to root out drinking from our village at Spindlewood. It seemed for the time, as if it would be the destruction of everything there.—The fact was, there was rum in every family; the parents took it daily, the children learned to love and long after it, by seeing the parents, and drinking little sweetened remains at the bottoms of the tumblers.—There were, every year, families broken up and destroyed, and fine fellows going to the very devil, with this thing; and so we made a movement to form a temperance society. I paid lecturers, and finally lectured myself. At last they said to me: "It's all very well for you rich people, that have twice as fine houses and twice as many pleasures as we poor folks, to pick on us for having a little something comfortable to drink in our houses. If we could afford your fine nice wines, and all that, we wouldn't drink whiskey. You must all have your wine on the table; whiskey is the poor man's wine."

"I think," said Lillie, "they were abominably impertinent to talk so to you. I should have told them so."

"Perhaps they thought I was impertinent in talking to them about their private affairs" said John; "but I will tell you what I said to them. I said, 'My good fellows, I will clear my house and table of wine, if you will clear yours of rum.' On this agreement I formed a Temperance Society; my father and I put our names at the head of the list, and we got every boy and man in Spindlewood. It was a complete victory; and, since then, there hasn't been a more temperate, thrifty set of people in these United States.

"Didn't your mother object?"

"My mother! no indeed; I wish you could have known my mother. It was no small sacrifice to her and father. Not that they cared a penny for the wine itself; but the poetry and hospitality of the thing, the fine old cherry associations connected with it, were a real sacrifice. But when we told my mother how it was, she never hesitated a moment. All our cellar of fine old wines was sent round as presents to hospitals, except a little that we keep for sickness."

"Well, really!" said Lillie, in a dry, cool tone, "I suppose it was very good of you, perfectly saintlike, and all that; but it does seem a great pity. Why couldn't these people take care of them elves? I don't see why you should go on denying yourself, just to keep them in the ways of virtue."

"Oh, it's no self-denial now! I'm quite used to it," said John, cheerily. "I am young and strong, and just as well as I can be, and don't need wine; in fact, I never think of it. The Fergusons, who are with us in the Spindlewood business, took just the same view of it, and did just as we did; and the Wilcoxes joined us; in fact, all the good old families of our set came into it."

"Well, couldn't you, just while the Follingsbees are here, do differently?"

"No, Lillie; there's my pledge, you see. No: it's really impossible."

Lillie frowned and looked disconsolate.

"John, I really do think you are selfish; you don't seem to have any consideration for me at all. It's going to make it so disagreeable and uncomfortable for me. The Follingsbees are accustomed to wine every day. I'm perfectly ashamed not to give it to them.

"Do e'm good to fast awhile, then," said John, laughing like a hard-hearted monster. "You'll see they won't suffer materially. Bridget makes splendid coffee."

"It's a shame to laugh at what troubles me, John; The Follingsbees are my friends, and of course I want to treat them handsomely."

"We will treat them just as handsomely as we treat ourselves," said John, and mortal man or woman ought not to ask more."

"I don't care," said Lillie, after a pause "I hate all these moral movements and society questions. They are always in the way of people's having a good time; and I believe the world would wag just as well as it does, if nobody had ever thought of them. People will call you a real muff, John."

"How very terrible!" said John, laughing. "What shall I do if I am called a muff? and what a jolly little Mrs. Muff you will be!" he said, pinching her cheek.

"You needn't laugh, John," said Lillie, pouting. "You don't know how things look in fashionable circles. The Follingsbees are in the very highest circle. They have lived in Paris, and been invited by the Emperor."

"I haven't much opinion of Americans who live in Paris and are invited by the Emperor," said John. "But, be that as it may, I shall do the best I can for them, and Mr. Young says 'angels could do no more:' so, good-by, puss: I must go to my office; and don't let's talk about this any more."

And John put on his cap and squared his broad shoulders, and, marching off with a resolute stride, went to his office, and had a most uncomfortable morning of it. You see, my dear friends, that though nature has set the seal of sovereignty on man, in broad shoulders and bushy beard; though he fortify and incase himself in rough overcoats and heavy boots, and walk with a dashing air, and whistle like a freeman, we all know it is not an easy thing to wage a warfare with a pretty little creature in lace cap and tiny slippers, who has a faculty of looking very pensive and grieved, and making up a sad little mouth, as if her heart were breaking.

John never doubted that he was right, and in the way of duty; and yet, though he braved it out so stoutly with Lillie, and though he marched out from her presence victoriously, as it were, with drums beating and colors flying, yet there was a dismal sinking of heart under it.

"I'm right; I know I am. Of course I can't give up here; it's a matter of principle, of honor," he said over and over to himself. "Perhaps if Lillie had been here I never should have taken such a pledge; but as I have, there's no help for it."

Then he thought of what Lillie had suggested about it's looking niggardly in hospitality, and was angry with himself for feeling uncomfortable. "What do I care what Dick Follingsbee thinks?" said he to himself: "a man [illegible] I despise: a coward and a swindler.—[illegible] of no principle. Lillie doesn't know [illegible] advantage it is to me to have such people [illegible] my house at all. Hang it all! I wish Lillie was a little more like the women I've been used to,—like Grace and Rose and my mother. But, poor thing, I oughtn't to blame her, after all, for her unfortunate bringing up. But it's no use to be with a woman that can't understand the grounds you go on. A man never wants to fight a woman. I'd rather give up hook and line, and let Lillie have her own way in everything. But there it won't do; a fellow must stop somewhere. Well, I'll make it up in being a model of civility to these confounded people that I wish were in the Red Sea. Let's see, I'll ask Lillie if she don't want to give a party for them when they come. By George! she shall have everything her own way there,—send to New York for the supper, turn the house topsy-turvy, illuminate the grounds, and do anything else she can think of. Yes, yes, she shall have carte blanche for everything!"

All which John told Mrs. Lillie when he returned to dinner and found her enacting the depressed wife in a most becoming lace cap and wrapper that made her look like a suffering angel; and the treaty was sealed with many kisses.

"You shall have carte blanche, dearest," he said, "for every thing but what we were speaking of; and that will content you, won't it?"

And Lillie, with lingering pensiveness, very graciously acknowledged that it would, and seemed so touchingly resigned, and made such a merit of her resignation, that John told her she was an angel; in fact, he had a sort of industrious premonitial idea that he was all sort of cruel monster to deny her anything. Lillie had sense enough to see, when she could do a thing, and when she couldn't. She had given up the case when John went out in the morning, and so accepted the treaty of peace with a good degree of cheerfulness; and she was soon busy discussing the matter. "You see, we've been invited everywhere, and haven't given anything," she said; and this will do up our social obligations to everybody here. And then we can show off our rooms; they really are made to give parties in."

"Yes, so they are," said John, delighted to see her smile again; "they seem adapted to that, and I don't doubt you'll make a brilliant affair of it, Lillie."

"Trust me for that, John," said Lillie. "I'll show the Follingsbees that something can be done here in Springdale as well as in New York." And so the great question was settled.

THE SWEDES are forming settlements in the State of Maine; the Germans extensive ones in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and the Scotch are organizing a system of emigration to the North West. Two townships of lands have been purchased of the Northern Pacific Railway Company by a wealthy Scotchman, who designs an organized emigration of his countrymen to that region.—The tract chosen is on the western border of Minnesota on the direct line of communication with the rich valleys of the North West, soon to be offered to the traffic of the world. A large number of the new immigrants have already arrived, with thoroughbred cattle for the purpose of engaging in the lucrative business of stock-raising.—Why cannot the Local Government of Ontario, with overflowing treasury, do something practical to invite immigration to the Province? Its Crown Land policy is a sham and a humbug. Why not give the wild land away—timber, minerals, and all, to actual settlers? The fact is, there is not a partical man in the Government, and therefore nothing can be reasonably expected from such a "Patent Combination." Let us have a chance, and that as soon as possible. Nothing can be done in the way of substantial advancement, so long as John Sandfield Macdonald rules the Province. The Ottawa Government is still worse if that can be possible, than the Ontario humbug. We grant that change is not necessarily reform, but any change in our present Government must be for the better, for, assuredly no change that could be made would put us in worse position.—Negligent, supine, circumlocutory, and corrupt, both the Ottawa and the Toronto Government have become a nuisance to the country, and the sooner we are rid of them better for all concerned.—Hamilton Times.

Like New York, Chicago is to have a post office transformed from a church. In the Chicago building as remodeled, the passage leading to to the Sunday school room is the retail stamp department; the registry department occupies a glass room; the pastor's study will be used as the place for cancelling stamps on newspapers; private letter boxes will be in the auditorium; and the gallery will be used by the 110 city carriers. The office will be open to the general public in about two weeks.

Cure Your Horses.

It is to the interest of all who own horses to keep them in a healthy and sound condition; experience has proved that "Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy" is the most efficacious, it has been used by thousands who will cheerfully confirm this statement. For Heaves, Coughs, Colds, and all diseases which effect the wind of horses it has no equal, nor is it equalled as a condition medicine; it purifies the blood, corrects and improves the appetite, and softens the skin; in fact so great is the improvement in the condition and appearance of the animal as to have led many to doubt if it could be the same horse. Remember the name and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont, proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Coughs and colds, when left to themselves frequently bring on pulmonary complaints, which lead to that distressing and fatal disease, consumption; but if attended to in time, "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers" are a certain remedy. They stop the irritating cough, and soothe and strengthen the bronchial tubes, all TEMPERANCE LECTURE AT MATHERS CORNERS:—There will be a Temperance Social in the School House, Mathers Corners, on the evening of the 22nd inst. After the Social, H. Squiers Esq. will deliver a Lecture. We hope he will have a full house.

SIGN OF THE ELEPHANT.—The new advertisement of Macdonald & Elder is too late for this weeks issue. They are making large additions to their already extensive stock in Dry Goods, Millinery, and Clothing. They promise great inducements. Look out for their new advertisement next week.

MR. BLACK'S LECTURE:—We regret that we were unable to be present at the lecture in aid of the Episcopal Church Sabbath School Library, on Tuesday evening last. We understand that it was very interesting and eloquent, and that there was a very good audience.

Our readers will please bear with us a few days, during the approaching holidays. This is our harvest, and we are sure that they will permit us to reap in due season. We expect to enlarge our paper by Christmas, or New Year, at the farthest; when we [illegible] best in the County, and now that we have set to work we will not rest until it should be second only to the weekly Globe in this Dominion.

CANADA PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—We have been requested to remind our readers that there will be a Tea, Recitation, Dialogues and Singing by the children, in connection with the Sabbath School of that church, on Friday evening, commencing at six o'clock, in the basement. Tickets will be 25 cents. The proceeds to be in aid of the Sabbath School. Let all go and encourage the children and teachers in the noble work. TWENTY-FIVE CENTS a year to the Sabbath School is but a trifle indeed.

HALIBURTON RAILWAY.—A meeting of the Stock holders was held on Tuesday, according to notice. The following are the Directors and Officers:—

DIRECTORS:—John Fowler, Cobourg; B. R. Kimball, Lindsay; Wm. Kerr, Cobourg; John D Armour, Cobourg; G. J. Scollie, Peterboro; W. I. Fowler, Peterboro; W. I. Stanton, Cobourg; Jas. Stevenson, Peterboro; Jas. Hall, Peterboro.

OFFICERS—J. D. Armour, President; Jas. Hall Vice-president; Chas. Perry Secretary John Fowler, Managing Director; J. I Dumble, Chief Engineer, W. J. Fowler, Treasurer; E. Burnham, Solicitor.

As we have heard considerable street talk about the hands in which the secular education of the town is placed, we give below the denominations of the trustees and teachers of the schools of the town.

The Bord of the Union School consists of 1 Episcopal, 5 Methodists, 4 Presbyterians and 2 Baptists. The Secretary-treasurer is Presbyterian and the Inspector a Baptist. The teachers consist of 4 Episcopalians, 5 Methodists, 2 Baptists, and 2 Presbyterians. Total, 13.

In the Convent School there are 4 teachers and in the R. C. Boys' School there are 2 teachers; in all, 6 Roman Catholic teachers in the town, and about 350 pupils attending their school. There are about 600 attending the Union School under 13 years.

EARLY CLOSING.—We notice that the Dry Goods and Clothing Merchants intend closing their stores at six o'clock during the next three months to allow young men an opportunity of a few hours enjoyment and exercise. The few minutes given to each young men for the purpose are not lost to the Employer, and we sincerely trust that the Clerks will so appreciate the present kindness of their employers as to see to it that no loss shall accrue. There are many ways of using the hour or two left at their disposal; bodily exercise necessary for health and vigor, but to give attention to bodily exercise to the neglect of mental culture is a wrong of small magnitude. We hope, therefore, that they will not neglect the opportunities afforded to acquire knowledge—it will be found profitable in business, and in moments too. The Mechanics Institute reading rooms are open every day, and the library is a select one. Lectures, too, are being arranged for. If our young men divide their evenings, giving two to pleasure and two to improving the mind, they will still have one evening for such new things as may appear most profitable or entertaining. Let us remind them that otherwise a favor may become an evil, and prove to be completely lost. Time spent in gossip, or gambling, blasts all prospects, and ends in utter ruin.

SOIREE.—The friends of Temperance Communication line, Smith, had a pleasant evening on Friday last, in the way of a Social tea, and short addresses on the subject of total abstinence. All seemed to enjoy themselves. They consisted chiefly of young people with a few of mature years to direct affairs generally. It would be a glorious thing if all our young people would grow up teetotlars.

ACCIDENTS.—A very serious accident happened to Mr. H. Davidson Smith on wednesday last which well proved fatal. Whilst drawing logs out of a swamp owned by his brother in the 5th concession, of smith, one of them struck against a hillock, tipped round, and he slipping and falling at the same time, it rolled over him breaking his clavicle and one of his ribs, besides inflicting minor injuries. Dr. O'Sullivan was in immediate attendance, and under his judicious treatment Mr. Davidson shows signs of speedy recovery.

Another painful accident occured in the township, on Monday last, to John Robins. Mr Geo. Fitzgerrald's hired man. He was out chopping where there had been a windfall two trees were locked together, and in cutting them down one fell across his leg, breaking it badly. Being alone, it was some time before it was known what had occurred. At length one of the members of the family heard his calls, assistance being procured, he was removed home in a very weak and exhausted state. Dr. Harvey was sent for, and dressed his wounds, and he is getting on as well as could be expected under the circumstances.—COM.

RELIGIOUS.—The Messrs. Carrol and Ruasel continue their religious meetings in the Music Hall. They are well attended by most attentive listeners—the Hall being often crowded to excess. They both have clear and earnest ways of presenting the truths of the Gospel to their hearers, and do set forth Christ and him crucified and exalted, in a manner calculated to arrest the attention of the careless, and to make the way plain to his acceptance by the enquirer. Much has been said about their doctrines and teachings before they came here—but if all their preachings have been the same as since their coming to Peterboro, we only wish that the world was full of such preachers. The spiritually dead many dread their appearance in any locality, and keep aloof from them. But all who sincerely love the Gospel and desire its extension will extend to them the right hand of fellowship, and not only wish them God-speed, but aid them by word and work. Their labours in Peterboro have been fully appreciated by the enquiring of all the churches, and no doubt will bring forth good fruit in due season—even already, many rejoice that they have heard them.

Parliamentary.

The Parliament of Ontario met on Thursday last. Mr. Scott, member for Ottawa, was elected speaker without opposition. Mr. Blake compelled Sadfield to change his tactics in parliament, by forcing him to take up business in an orderly manner.

Some of the uncoated members came forward and took the oath of members; Gow[illegible] leading them as sheep to the slaughter.

Mr. Blake intended to try the strength of the ministry, on a square vote in reference to voting away the people's money, without telling how or where it should be spent.

There being no connection of trains yesterday the Toronto exchanges did not arrive in time for this issue. We will give due attention to all the debates during the session.

Railway Meeting in the Music Hall.

On Tuesday evening a railway meeting was held in the Music Hall. The Mayor in the Chair, and J. A. Hall, Esq. acting as Secretary. The meeting was large. Messrs. Junkins, Bick, and other gentlemen from Verulam, were at the meeting; also the Reeve of Fenelon Falls. These gentlemen had come to witness the interests Peterboro is taking in Railway matters, and see for themselves what prospects there were for the road North.

Mr. E. Burnham addressed the in a calm and sensible speech, urging the wisdom of securing the Haliburton Railway to Bobcaygeon before the opportunity slips out of our hands.

Mr. Stratton and Mr. Dumble followed, taking up the rival schemes and the prospects and advantages—recommending the necessity of assisting the Cobourg and Haliburton Railway to Bobcaygeon—as there are no prospects of ever getting the Belleville Road.

Mr. Carnegie followed but falling foul of Mr. Fowler and Mr. John D. Armour, There was considerable cross-firing and noisy talk and recrimination, which we do not care to publish. Both Mr. Fowler and Mr. Armour pressed very hard on Mr. Carnegie.

Mr. Junkins, Reeve of Verulam, and Mr. Naylor, Reeve of Fenelon by request addressed the meeting in the most common sense way, wondering why the proposed road had not been built long ago, and stating that they were prepared to assist in doing so now, if Peterboro showed by her action that the road was going to be built.

A resolution was passed only five hands being lifted against it—endorsing the action of the Council, and the giving of $80,000 to the Haliburton Coy.

REEVES.

BELMONT.—We have the authority of W. W. Armstrong, Esq., Reeve of Belmont, to say that he will not be a Candidate for re election; but we understand that Mr. W. Burgess or Porter Preston, is expected to take his place. We have not heard the names of any other parties as Candidates for Municipal honors in that quarter.

DUMMER.—We believe T. G. Choate, Esq., will be a Candidate in this Municipality, and we feel confident will be elected without opposition.

BURLEIGH.—Dr. Clegg will again be a Candidate for re-election. We believe Mr. Golborne is spoken of as an opponent to the Doctor, and we have heard the name of Mr. D. Anderson also as a Candidate. Mr. Anderson has not been tried in public life—therefore, we can neither praise nor condemn. The Doctor has been, and has proved himself a good Reeve. The people will no doubt elect him by a large majority. The ratepayers of Burleigh, &c., must be aware how much he has done for them, and are intelligent enough to know what will be for their own interest.

SMITH.—Messrs. Walton and Garbutt will try the relative strength of their respective popularity. They are both well enough known in the Township without newspaper paragraphs or political hacks abusing or puffing either of them.

OTONABEE.—Messrs. Millar and Blezard will be Candidates for Reeve and Deputy Reeve. We have not heard of opposition.

ENNISMORE.—There will be a change in this Township, but who the successful man may be, remains to be learned. The present Reeve has not the confidence of the people—some imagining that he is too much the creature of Circumstances, and too often out of his place when Railway By-laws are being discussed; while some few are foolish enough to hint that his own views are seldom acted upon, if others of a more tangible shape are presented.

Wesleyan Sabbath School.

The Anniversary Services in connection with the above Sabbath School, were held on Sabbath, when the Rev. Mr. Kines, of Keene, preached twice. On Monday, the annual Soiree was held, and was a complete success. The tea was all that could be desired, and the attendance was as large as could be accommodated in the School Room. The financial part, we would suppose, therefore, equally successful.

D. W. Dumble, Esq., occupied the chair during the singing of the children, and speaking, and Mrs. T. Donnelly accompanied the singing on the melodeon.

The Rev. Messrs. Davis, Kines, Brooking and McLennan addressed the teachers, parents and children at some length, and Messrs. Pentland, Black, Stratton and Weir, Superintendents of the other town Sabbath Schools made some brief remarks on the Sabbath School work.

Mr. Mason, Secretary of the school, read the Treasurer's Report, showing the income and expenditure in detail. From the report we learned the income to be $163.26, and expenditure $126 37—leaving a balance in the hands of the Treasurer of $36.89; a very satisfactory state we would be ready to believe. The number of boys in Infant Class during the year was 67; girls, 64. The number in the other classes—boys, 121, girls, 133; making the number on the Sabbath school register for the year 385. The average attendance of the infant class was 87; the average of the other classes 137, giving a total average attendance of 218.

In the work of teaching them are engaged 28 teachers, but the irregularity of their attendance reduced this to 20, which must have made it very unsatisfactory for the Superintendent and classes.

The officers have provided well in the way of libaries, as they have no less than 576 volumes therein, and 250 purchased but not yet arranged. The report referred in affecting terms to the death of Mr. Ruther ford the late Superintendent of the school, and urged in his parting words earnestness on the teachers and pupils, so that all might meet above where parting is no more. The adoption of the excellent report was moved by Mr. Brooking, and carried unanimously.

Mr. Dumble having been asked to leave the Chair, Mr. Donnelly, the worthy Superintendent, took it, when a vote of thanks was tendered to the Chairman for the very efficient and satisfactory manner in which he had conducted the meeting. Mr. Donnelly asked for a vote of thanks to the Ministers, Superintendents and friends, who had attended the meeting, and to the kind friends who had supplied the provisions. The Rev. Mr. Davis asked a vote of thanks to the Superintendent, Officers and Teachers, for their earnest and satisfactory work in the Sabbath school, after which the whole proceeding was brought to a close by the Rev. Mr. Davis pronouncing benediction. The evening was very pleasantly spent. The addresses were pointed and practical. The singing of the children, under Mrs. Donnelly was delightful, and the evident interest of the church in their Sabbath school was very apparent in the large attendance at the annual service and soiree.

The By-Laws.

The Railway By-law published to be voted on, on the 19th inst., has been withdrawn by the Town Council, and another one submitted. The object is to bring the whole matter before the people in such a way as to be fairly understood by them. Already one By-law has been passed granting $40,000 to the Haliburton Railway, and a second has been submitted and withdrawn: no vote will be taken on it. The By-law for $80,000 is intended to supersede the other two, so that the whole sum of bonuses will be $80,000 to the Haliburton Company. Conditions have been prepared on which the grant shall be given, but any such agreement can be changed or altered before the passing of the By-law.

We hope to have such conditions secured as to freight, or tariff, the running of the road, and the prevention of algamation with any rival road as shall be approved by the good sense of the ratepayers, and thus secure the best possible terms for the town.

We have no right to consider Mr. Fowler in the matter, nor the Haliburton Co. nor the people of Cobourg. The interests of the Town of Peterboro are paramount and must be protected, but let not cavilers kill the whole thing by exactions, which might so clog enterprise as to prevent any one taking hold of it.

The opposition to the present Haliburton Company is an interested one, and intensified by a little regret that the Company is now in the hands of others than its concoctors. But what has that to do with us? The business men of Peterboro are all in favor of railway extension to the North, and are also warmly alive to the benefit it would be to the Town to get another outlet to the front, and we do not believe that they will act contrary to their earnest convictions. We want a rail way Northward. We want it soon. There is no use in going to Mud Lake only. We must, if possible, get to Georgian Bay, and as soon as possible; but in the mean time let us go to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls. This may be secured by July or August by affording proper encouragement now, and the ratepayers of Peterboro will surely not commit an act so suicidal as to drive the Haliburton Company from Peterboro. The Belleville people or some of the Directors, had axes to grind, and by an over anxiety to grind too close they drove Mr. Fowler away from them, and now they regret it. Shall we do so and shoulder the responsibility of forever cutting off all hopes of railway communication with the Northern Townships and the great West?

Railway Meeting at Bobcaygeon.

Mr. A. F. Wood, the Hon. Billa Flint and the Hon. Mr. Read, of Belleville, held a Railway Meeting in Bobcaygeon, in the interests of the Grand Junction Railway proposed scheme, on Friday last. Mr. Wood was spokesman, but the Hon. Billa Flint addressed the meeting at some length.

They had no scheme, no proposition to lay before the people of Verulam and Bobcaygeon, they came proposing no road, asking no bonuses, nor any other favor—but merely beseeching the people to give no bonus to any other road at present.

AMALGAMATION WITH THE MIDLAND.

It leaked out, however, that the Grand Junction people's prospects of ever building their road are so slim that they have been treating with the Midland people for running powers over their road to Georgian Bay, and the arrangements have been favorably received by the Midland Coy. Mr. Wood distinctly stated that unless Peterboro should give a satisfactory bonus, they would go to Omemee and build a branch from that place to Bobcaygeon, if Verulam did its duty. Otherwise they would build a branch from Lindsay to Fenelon Falls.

Mr. Junkins, of Verulam, put the question to Mr. Wood twice—"From what point do you intend building your branch to this place." When Mr. Wood twice replied:—"If ever we build a branch to Bobcaygeon it will be from Omemee or some point near it, so that Peterboro may be be left out in the cold.

Mr. Hugel, Vice president of the Midland Coy., however, dispelled all hopes of the Grand Junction people by stating that they would build the branch from Omemee to Bobcaygeon and retain all local traffic. Then why would the Grand Junction people build a branch?

The meeting was evidently called in the interests of the Midland Company, and intended to bluff off the Haliburton Road if possible, by advising the people of Verulam to give nothing at present.

Mr. Flint's speech was not worthy of the man whom the people are taught to honor and respect for honesty and straightforwardness. It consisted of nothing but abuse of John Fowler for leaving the Bellevillites to look after their interests in general, and Mr. Flint's wharf in particular. He owns the Belleville wharf, he told us too. He found fault with Mr. Fowler for using champagne, and balls and music in connection with his railway projects, but admitted that he (Mr. Flint) was willing to wink at Brandy, Balls and Bands, while in the interests of the Belleville road, as according to his own words—"If you would catch flies you must use sugar or Molasses,"—consistency with a vengeance, surely.

We despise all brandy, balls and dances, yet we cannot put an end to either one or the other, which we regret, but it is just as bad to smile approvingly, as to engage in the waltz, or guzzle the champagne.

BRIBERY.

Another astounding piece of bribery leaked out that took the meeting by surprise. It was this. The Provisional Directors, one of whom was the Editor of the Review, had placed a motion on their books offering a bribe of FIVE PER CENT to any persons who might be instrumental in securing a bonus for their road—and the present Directors, we are told, have adopted the same policy. The very inception of the Company in this County was accompanied by offers of bribes. The Reeve of Galway being offered $300 for his vote in the County Council, if he would vote for the $75,000, at least so we said heard and again. And the people have observed why the Reeve of a [illegible] was out of his place [illegible] vote was taken. We [illegible] to any one. [illegible] of the Town [illegible] in the mi[illegible] people to get a road north; what would they say! You cannot now help yourselves. You must give us $150,000 or perhaps $200,000, before we undertake the work for you. And the man who would be instrumental in defeating the Haliburton Loyalnow, would then be held as the man deserving the PEN CENTAGE, and he would get his $7,500 to $10,000 out of the first of the money. Are the ratepayers of Peterboro prepared to give $7,500 to $10,000 bribe to some of our own citizens to betray us. Better then we were sold for a smaller sum. TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS, however, are worth an effort on the part of some one, and an earnest effort will be made to secure it; we may rest assured of that. Up to the time of this affair of bribeswe were friendly to the Grand Junction scheme, since that we have no confidence in its promoters. Railroads built on such corrupt principles cannot prosper.

[illegible] of those who [illegible] of such [illegible] law should [illegible] Haliburton [illegible] that we [illegible]

BY-LAW NO.

A By-law to aid and assist the Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company by giving the sum of Eighty Thousand Dollars, in debentures, by way of bonus to the Company, and for the issuing of such debentures, and to authorize the levying of such a rate as will pay the said debentures and the interest thereon, and to repeal By-law Number 249, of the Municipality of the Town of Peterborough, passed on the 28th day of November, A. D. 1870; entitled:

A By-law to aid and assist the Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, by giving the sum of Forty Thousand Dollars, in debentures, by way of bonus to the Company, and for the issuing of such debentures, and to authorize the levying of such a rate as will pay the said debentures and the interest thereon

WHEREAS, by the Act of the Second Section of the Legislature of Ontario, passed in the Thirty-second year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, incorporating the Peterboro and Haliburton Railway Company, it is provided that "it shall further be lawful for any municipality or municipalities through any part of which, or near which the Railway or works of the said Company shall pass or be situated, of which may be benefitted thereby, to aid and assist the said Company by loaning or guaranteeing, or giving money by way of bonus, or other means to the Company, or issuing municipal bonds to, or in aid of the Company, and otherwise in such manner and to such extent as such municipalities or any of them may think expedient, provided always, that no such aid, loan, bonus, or guarantee shall be given, except after the passing of By-laws for the purpose, and the adoption of such By-law by the ratepayers as provided in the Railway Act"

And whereas, the municipality of the Town of Peterborough is desirous of aiding and assisting the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, by giving to the said Company the sum of Eight Thousand Dollars in debentures bearing interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, redeemable in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

And whereas, by an Act of the Parliament of the Late Province of Canada, passed in the Twenty-fourth year of the reign of Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, entitled an Act to consolidate the debt of the Town of Peterborough, and to authorize the issue of debentures on the security of town property and for other purposes. It is enacted that certain property of the said municipality of the Town of Peterborough consisting of the Town Hall and Market Block and the land south of Townsend Street and east of Park Street with all their appurtenances is vested in the Commissioners therein named and their successors provided for, called the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust, and that it should be lawful for the Mayor and Town Council of the said town, for the time being, to cause to be issued debentures under the seal of the said corporation, to be signed by the Mayor, countersigned by the Treasurer of the said Town, and the Secretary of the said Commissioners, and to the amount, and for the purposes and in the manner in the said recited Act, designated, and that it should be lawful for the said Commissioners to issue new debentures, if required, from time to time, upon which to raise funds to retire outstanding debentures, and the municipality of the Town of Peterborough, should annually, upon the application of the said Commissioners, raise upon and from the rateable property of the said town, the interest and sinking fund requisite for the redemption of the said debentures according to the said recited Act.

And whereas, it is proposed to aid and assist the the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company to the extent and in the manner aforesaid, by causing and procuring the issue of eighty debentures, for the sum of One Thousand Dollars each, redeemable as hereinafter mentioned in the manner and subject to the provisions of the said lastly recited Act, as to their issue and redemption and delivering the same to the Trustees, to be appointed under and pursuant to the first recited Act, to be applied according to the provisions of such Act in aid of the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway, Company.

1st. That it shall and may be lawful for the said Municipality of the Town of Peterborough, to aid and assist by way of bonus the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, by giving debentures of the said Municipality to the amount of Eighty Thousand Dollars.

2nd. That for the purposes aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful to issue debentures to the amount of Eighty Thousand Dollars to be payable, as follows:—

Eight Thousand Dollars at the end of eleven years, and Eight Thousand Dollars a year thereafter for nine consecutive years, computing from the first day of January, 1872; such debentures to be for one thousand dollars each with interest at six per cent, payable half-yearly, such debentures to be issued, and provided for as directed by the Act entitled—"An Act to consolidate the debt of the Town of Peterborough, and to authorize the issue of debentures on the security of the Town property and for other purposes."

3rd That such debentures shall be issued on the first day of February, 1872, and the interest thereon at the rate aforesaid, shall be payable half-yearly, on the first days of January and July in each and every year.

4. That such debentures shall not, nor shall any portion thereof be handed over to the Trustees appointed or to be appointed under and pursuant to the said Act, incorporating the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, and the Act amending the same until after an agreement shall have been made and executed by and between the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company and the Municipality of the Town of Peterborough, embodying the terms, conditions and stipulations upon and subject to which the bonus herein before mentioned, is proposed to be given. Which said agreement this By-law, and the said debentures therefrom to issue, shall be dependent and then such agreement shall be handed over to the said Trustees, to be appointed under the said Act before or at the time of the delivery to such Trustees of the said debentures or any of them.

5th. That the said debentures when issued shall be delivered by the Mayor of the said Town of Peterborough to the said Trustees, upon such agreement having been entered into and concluded, and at the time or after the delivery of such agreement to the said trustees as heretofore provided.

6th. And it is hereby further enacted that By-law Number 249, of the said Municipality of the Town of Peterborough, entitled:

A By-law to aid and assist the Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company by giving the sum of Forty Thousand Dollars, in debentures, by way of bonus to the Company, and for the issuing of such debentures, and to authorize the levying of such a rate as will pay the said debentures and the interest thereon. Passed on the 28th day of November, in the year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy be and is hereby repealed.

7th. Provided that this By-law and everything therein contained shall be of no force or effect, and that no debenture or debentures shall be issued thereunder until the same shall have been paid, approved and made valid by an Act of the Legislature of Ontario.

8th. And it is further enacted that the votes of the electors of the said Municipality shall be taken on the proposed By-law, on the 11th of January One Thousand Eight hundred and Seventy-two, and in the following places, that is to say, in each of the Four Wards of the said Town, and at the places of polling therein, respectively, of the last municipal elections. That the polling shall open at the hour of Nine of the clock in the forenoon, and close at the hour of Five of the clock in the afternoon of the same day. That John Irwin shall be Returning Officer in the North Ward; James Edwards, Returning Officer in the East Ward; Robert Rowe, Returning Officer in the Centre Ward; and William Cummings Returning Officer in the South Ward, for the taking said vote.

NOTICE.

Take notice that the above is a true copy of a proposed By-law of the municipality of the Town of Peterborough, which will be taken into consideration by the Town Council of the Town of Peterborough, after one month from the first publication thereof in the Peterborough Review newspaper, the date of which first publication was Friday, the 15th of December inst. as their Sole Agent for Peterborough and Vicinity. An opportunity will be thus afforded to procure, at all times, in Peterborough just as well as in Montreal, Spectacles Unequalled by any for their Strengthing and Preserving Qualities.

Too much cannot be said as to their SUPERIORITY over the ordinary glasses worn—there is no glimmering, wavering of the sight, dizziness, or other unpleasant sensation, but on the contrary, from the peculiar construction of the Lenses, they are soothing and pleasant, causing a feeling of relief to the wearer, and PRODUCING A CLEAR and DISTINCT VISION, as in the natural healing sight. They are the only Spectacles that Preserve as well as assist the sight!

And are the CHEAPEST because the BEST always lasting MANY YEARS without change being necessary.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, nor was ever any before so universally adopted into use, in every country and among all classes, as this mild but efficient purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is a more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cures them; those who have not, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and all know that what it does once it does always—that it never fails through any fault or neglect of its composition. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of its remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cures are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings, they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as this exce[illegible] remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a preventive against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that he must obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of them here, or do more than assure the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As its name implies, it does Cure, and does not fail. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Bismuth, Zinc, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, it in no-wise injures any patient. The number and importance of its cures in the agueish-ists, are literally beyond account, and we believe without a parallel in the history of Ague medicine. Our pride is gratified by the acknowledgments we receive of the radical cures effected in obstinate cases, and where other remedies had wholly failed. Disacclimated persons, either resident in, or travelling through miasmatic localities, will be protected by taking the AGUE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver into healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many truly remarkable cures, where other medicines had failed.

Prepared by Drs. J. C. AYER & CO., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold by all the world.

IRON IN THE BLOOD

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is an established fact to have the character of an ailment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and saves "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

FURS---ATTENTION.

The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in furs against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.

He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a safe guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.

The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.

I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as strangers, to the inspection of my furs, which are [illegible]

Select Poetry.

Death of the Old Year.

BY ALFRED TENNYSON.

Full knee-deep lies the winter snow,
And the winter winds are wearily sighing:
Toll ye the church bell sad and slow,
And tread softly and speak low,
For the old year lies a-dying.
Old year, you must not die;
You came to us so readily,
You lived with us so steadily,
Old year, you shall not die.

He lieth still; he doth not move;
He will not see the dawn of day;
He hath no other life above,
He gave me a friend, and a true, true love,
And the New Year will take 'em away.
Old year, you must not go;
So long as you have been with us,
Such joy as you have seen with us,
Old year, you shall not go.

He frothed his bumpers to the brim;
A jollier year we shall not see;
But though his eyes are waxing dim,
And though his friends speak ill of him,
He was a friend to me.
Old year, you shall not die,
We did so laugh and cry with you,
I've half a mind to die with you,
Old year, if you must die

He was full of jest and jest,
But all his merry quips are o'er,
To see him die, across the waste
His sons and heir doth ride post-haste,
But he'll be dead before.
Every one for his own,
The night is starry and cold my friend,
And the New Year, blithe and bold my friend
Came up to take his own.

How hard he breathes! over the snow
I heard just now the crowing cock:
The shadows flicker to and fro;
The cricket chirps; the light burns low;
'Tis nearly twelve o'clock.
Shake hands before you die
Old year, we'll dearly rue for you,
What is it we can do for you?
Speak out before you die.

His face is growing sharp and thin.
Alack! our friend is gone,
Close up his eyes; tie up his chin;
Step from his corpse, and let him in
That standeth there alone,
And waiteth at the door.
There's a new foot on the floor, my friend,
And a new face at the door, my friend,
A new face at the door.

Pink and White Tyranny.

BY MRS HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

CHHATER XV.

THE FOLLINGSBEES ARRIVE.

Next week the Follingsbees alighted, so to speak, from a cloud of glory. They came in their own carriage, and with their own horses; all in silk and silver, purple and fine linen, "with rings on their fingers and bells on their toes," as the old song has it. We pause to caution our readers that this last clause is to be interpreted metaphorically.

Springdale stood astonished. The quiet, respectable old town had not seen any thing like it for many a long day; the ostlers at the hotel talked of it; the boys followed the carriage, and hung on the slats of the fence to see the party alight, and said to one another in their artless vocabulary, "Golly! ain't it bully!"

There was Mr. Dick Follingsbee, with a pair of waxed, tow-colored moustache's like the French emperor's, and ever so much longer. He was a little, thin, light-colored man, with a yellow complexion and sandy hair; who, with the appendages aforesaid, looked like some kind of large insect, with very long antennæ. There was Mrs. Follingsbee,—a tall, handsome, dark-eyed, dark-haired, dashing woman, French dressed from the tip of her lace parasol to the toe of her boot. There was Mademoiselle Therese, the French maid, an inexpressibly fine lady; and there was la petite Marie, Mrs. Follingsbee's three-year-old hopeful, a lean, bright-eyed little thing, with a great scarlet bow on her back that made her look like a walking butterfly. On the whole, the tableau of arrival was so impressive, that Bridget and Annie, Rosa and all the kitchen cabinet, were in a breathless state of excitement.

"How do I find you ma chere l' said Mrs. Follingsbee, folding Lillie rapturously to her breast. "I've been just dying to see you! How lovely everything looks! Oh, ciel! how like dear Paris!" she said, as she was conducted into the parlor, and sunk upon the sofa.

"Pretty well done, too, for America!" said Mr. Follingsbee, gazing round, and settling his collar. Mr. Follingsbee was one of the class of returned travellers who always speak condescendingly of any thing American as "so-so," or "tolerable," or "pretty fair,"—a considerateness which goes a long way towards keeping up the spirits of the country.

"I say, Dick," said his lady, "have you seen to the bags and wraps?"

"All right, madam."

"And my casket of medicines and the books?"

"O. K.," replied Dick.

"Oh! how often must I tell you not to use those odious slang terms!" said his wife, reprovingly.

"Oh! Mrs. John Seymour knows me of old," said Mr. Follingsbee, winking facetiously at Lillie. "We've had many a jolly lark together; haven't we Lil?"

"Certainly we have," said Lillie, affably. "But come, darling," she added to Mrs. Follingsbee, "don't you want to be shown to your room?"

"Go it, then, my dearie; and I'll toddle up with the fol-de-rols and what-you-may-calls," said the incorrigible Dick. "There, wife, Mrs. John Seymour shall go first, so that you shan't be jealous of her and me. You know we came pretty near being in interesting relations ourselves at one time; didn't we now?" he said with another wink.

"It is said that a thorough-paced naturalist can reconstruct a whole animal from specimen bone. In like manner, we imagine that, from these words of dialogue, our expert readers can reconstruct Mr. and Mrs. Follingsbee; he vulgar; shallow, sharp, keen at a bargain, and utterly without scruples; with a sort of hilarious, animal good nature that was in a state of constant ebullition. He was, as Richard Baxter said of a better man, "always in a state of hilarity that another would be in when he hath taken a cup too much."

Dick Follingsbee began his life as a pedlar. He was now reputed to be master of untold wealth, kept a yacht and race-horses, ran his own theatre, and patronized the whole world and creation in general with a jocular freedom. Mrs. Follingsbee had been a country girl, with small early advantages, but considerable ambition. She married Dick Follingsbee, and helped him up in the world, as a clever ambitious woman may. The last few years she had been spending in Paris, improving her mind and manners in reading Dumas' and Madame George Sand's novels, and availing herself of such outskirt advantages of the court of the Tuileries as industrious, pains-taking Americans, not embarassed by self-respect may command.

Mrs. Follingsbee, like many another of our republicans who besieged the purlieus of the late empire, felt that a residence near the court, at a time when everything good and decent in France was hiding in obscure corners, and every thing parvenue was wide awake and active, entitled her to speak as one having authority concerning French character, French manners and customs. This lady assumed the sentimental literary role. She was always cultivating herself in her own way; that is to say, she was assiduous in what she called keeping up her French.

In the opinion of many of her class of thinkers, French is the key of the kingdom of heaven; and, of course, it is worth one's while to sell all that one has to be possessed of it. Mrs. Follingsbee had not been in the least backward to do this; but, as to getting the golden key she had not succeeded. She had formed the acquaintance of many disreputable people; she had read French novels and French plays such as no well-bred French would suffer in her family; she had lost such innocence and purity of mind as she had to lose, and, after all, had not got the French language.

However, there are losses that do not trouble the subject of them, because they bring insensibility. Just as Mrs. Follingsbee's ear was not delicate enough to know that she had spent her labor for "that which was not bread." She had only succeeded in acquiring such an air that, on a careless survey, she might have been taken for one of the demi. monde of Paris; while she secretly imagined herself the fascinating heroine of a French romance.

The friendship between Mrs. Follingsbee and Lillie was of the most impassioned nature; though, as both of them were women of a good solid perception in regard to their own material interests, there were excellent reasons on both sides for this enthusiasm.

Notwithstanding the immense wealth of the Follingsbees, there were circles to which Mrs. Follingsbees found it difficult to be admitted. With the usual human perversity, these, of course, became exactly the ones, and the only ones she particularly cared for. Her ambition was to pass beyond the ranks of the "shoddy" aristocracy to those of the old established families. Now, the Seymours and the Fergusons and the Wilcoxes, were families of this sort; and none of them had ever cared to conceal the fact, that they did not intend to know the Follingsbees. The marriage of Lillie into the Seymour family was the opening of a door; and Mrs. Follingsbee had been at Lillie's feet during her Newport campaign. On the other hand, Lillie, having taken the sense of the situation at Springdale, had cast her thoughts forward like a discreet young woman, and perceived in advance of her a very dull domestic winter, enlivened only by reading-circles and such slow tea-parties as unsophisticated Springdale found agreeable. The idea of a long visit to the New York alhambra of the Follingsbees in the winter, with balls, parties, unlimited opera-boxes, was not a thing to be disregarded; when Mrs. Follingsbee "ma chere!" Lillie, Lillie "my dearest" Mrs. Follingsbee; and the pair are to be seen at this blessed moment sitting with their arms tenderly around each others waists on a causeuse in Mrs. Follingsbee's dressing-room.

"You don't know, mignonne," said Mrs. Follingsbee, "how perfectly ravissante these apartments are! I'm so glad poor Charlie did them so well for you. I laid my commands on him, poor fellow!"

"Pray, how does your affair get on with him?" said Lillie.

"O dearest! you've no conception what a trial it is to me to keep him in the bounds of reason. He has such struggles of mind about that stupid wife of his. Think of it, my dear! a man like Charlie Ferrols, all poetry, romance, ideality, tied to a woman who thinks of nothing but her children's teeth and bowels, and turn the whole house into a nursery! Oh, I've no patience with such people."

"Well, poor fellow! it's a pity he ever got married," said Lillie."

"Well, it would be all very well if this sort of woman ever would be reasonable; but they won't. They don't in the least comprehend the necessities of genius. They want to yoke Pegasus to a cart, you see. Now, I understand Charlie perfectly, I could give him that which he needs. I appreciate him. I make a bower of peace and enjoyment for him, where his artistic nature finds the repose it craves."

"And she pitches into him about you," said Lillie, not slow to perceive the true literal rendering of all this.

"Of course, ma chere,—tears him, reads him, lacerates his soul; sometimes he comes to me in the most dreadful state. Really, dear, I have apprehended something quite awful! I shouldn't be the least surprised if he should blow his brains out!"

And Mrs. Follingsbee sighed deeply, gave a glance at herself in an opposite mirror, and smoothed down a bow pensively, as the prima donna at the grand opera generally does when her lover is getting ready to stab himself.

"Oh! I don't think he's going to kill himself," said Mrs. Lillie, who it must be understood, was somewhat somewhat sceptical about the power of her friend's charms, and looked on this little French romance with the eyes of an outsider: "never you believe that, dearest. These men make dreadful tearings, and shocking eyes and mouths; but they take pretty good care to keep in the world, after all. You see, if a man's dead, there's an end of all things; and I fancy they think of that before they come to anything decisive."

"Chere ecoutrile," said Mrs. Follingsbee, regarding Lillie with a pensive smile: "you are just your old self, I see; you are now at the height of your power,—'jeune Madame, un mari qui vous adore,' ready to pull all things under your feet. How can you feel for a worn, lonely heart like mine, that sighs for congeniality?"

"Bless me, now," said Lillie, briskly; "you don't tell me that you are going to be so silly as to get in love with Charlie yourself! It's all well enough to keep these fellows on the tragic high ropes, but if a woman falls in love herself, there's an end of her power. And darling, just think of it: you wouldn't have married that creature if you could; he's poor as a rat, and always will be; these desperately interesting fellows always are. Now you have money without end; and of course you have position; and your husband is a man you can get anything in the world out of."

"Oh! as to that, I don't complain of Dick," said Mrs. Follingsbee: "he's coarse and vulgar, to be sure, but he never stands in my way, and I never stand in his; and, as you say, he's free about money. But still, darling sometimes it seems to me such a weary thing to live without sympathy of soul! A marriage without congeniality of soul, mon Dieu, what is it? And then the harsh, cold laws of human society prevent any relief. They forbid natures that are made for each other from being to each other what they can be."

"You mean that people will talk about you," said Lillie. "Well, I assure you, dearest, they will talk awfully, if you are not very careful. I say this to you frankly, as your friend, you know."

"Ah, ma petite! you don't need to tell me that. I am careful," said Mrs. Follingsbee. "I am always lecturing Charlie, and showing him that we must keep up les convenances; but is it not hard on us poor women to lead always this repressed, secretive life?"

"What made you marry Mr. Follingsbee?" said Lillie, with apparent artlessness.

"Darling, I was but a child. I was ignorant of the mysteries of my own nature, of my capabilities. As Charles said to me the other day, we never learn what we are till some congenial soul unlocks the secret door of our hearts. The fact is, dearest, that American society, with its strait-laced, puritanical notions, bears terribly hard on woman's heart. Poor Charlie! he is no less one of the victims of society."

"Oh, nonsense!" said Lillie. You take it too much to heart. You mustn't mind all those men say. They are always being desperate and tragic.—Charles has talked just so to me, time and time again. I understand it all. He talked exactly so to me when he came to Newport last summer. You must take matters easy, my dear,—you, with your beauty, and your style, and your money. Why, you can lead all New York captive! Forty fellows like Charles are not worth spoiling one's dinner for. Come, cheer up; positively I shan't let you be blue ma reine. Let me ring for your maid to dress you for dinner. Au revoir."

The fact was that Mrs. Lillie, having formerly set down this lovely Charlie on the list of her own adorers, had small sympathy with the sentimental romance of her friend.

"What a fool she makes of herself!" she thought, as she contemplated her own sylph-like figure and wonderful freshness of complexion in the glass. "Don't I know Charles Ferrols? he wants her to get him into fashionable life, and knows the way to do it. To think of that stout, middle-aged party imagining that Charles Ferrols's going to die for her charms! it's too funny! How stout the dear old thing does get, to be sure!"

It will be observed here that our dear Lillie did not want for perspicacity. There is nothing so absolutely clear-sighted, in certain directions as selfishness. Entire want of sympathy with others clears up one's vision astonishingly, and enables us to see all the weak points and ridiculous places of our neighbors in the most accurate manner possible.

As to Mr. Charles Ferrols, our Lillie was certainly in the right in respect to him. He was one of those blossoms of male humanity that seem as expressly designed by nature for the ornamentation of ladies' boudoirs, as an Italian greyhound: he had precisely the same graceful, shivery adaption to live by petting and caresses. His tastes were all so exquisite that it was the most difficult thing in the world to keep him out of misery a moment. He was in a chronic state of disgust with something or other in our lower world from morning till night.

His profession was naturally that of architecture and landscape gardening; but, in point of fact, consisted in talking certain rich, blase, stupid, fashionable people how they could quickest get rid of their money. He ruled despotically in the Follingsbee halls; he bought and rejected pictures and jewelry, ordered and sent off furniture, with the air of an absolute master; scanning himself meanwhile with running a French romance with the handsome mistress of the establishment. As a consequence, he had not only opportunities for much quite feathering of his own nest, but the eclat of always having the use of the Follingsbees' carriages, horses, and opera-boxes, and being the acknowledged and supreme head of fashionable dictation. Ladies sometimes pull caps for such charming individuals, as we have seen in the case of Mrs. Follingsbee and Lillie.

For it is not to be supposed that Mrs. Follingsbee, though she had assumed the gushing style with her young friend, wanted spirit or perception on her part. Her darling Lillie had left a nettle in her bosom which rankled there.

"The vanity of these thin, watery blondes!" she said to herself, as she looked into her own great dark eyes in the mirror,—"thinking Charles Ferrols cares for her! I know just what he thinks of her, thank heaven! Poor thing! Don't you think Mrs. John Seymour has gone off astonishingly since her marriage?" she said to Therese

"Mon Dieu, madame s'est," said the obedient tire-woman, scraping the very back of her throat in her zeal. "Madame Seymour has the real American maigreur. These thin women, madame, they have no substance; there is nothing in them. For young girls, they are charming; but, as women, they are just nothing at all. Now, you will see, madame, what I tell you. In a year or two, people shall ask, 'Was she ever handsome?' But you, madame, you come to your prime like great rose! Oh, there is no comparison of you to Mrs. John Seymour."

It may be imagined that the entertaining of Dick Follingsbee was no small strain on the conjugal endurance of our faithful John; but he was on duty, and endured without flinching that gentleman's free and easy jokes and patronizing civilities.

"I do wish, darling, you'd teach that creature not to call you 'Lillie' in that abominably free manner," he said to his wife, the first day, after dinner.

"Mercy on us, John! what can I do? All the world knows that Dick Follingsbee's and everybody agrees to take what he says for what it's worth. If I should go to putting on airs, he'd behave ten times worse than he does: the only way is, to pass it off quietly, and not to seem to notice anything he says or does. My way is, to smile, and look gracious, and act as if I hadn't heard any thing but what is peppectly proper."

"It's a tremendious infliction, Lillie!"

"Poor man! is it?" said Lillie, putting her arms round his neck, and stroking his whiskers. "Well, now, he's a good man to bear it so well, so he is; and they shan't plague him long. But, John, you must confess Mrs. Follingsbee is nice: poor woman! she is mortified with the way Dick will go on; but she can't do anything with him."

"Yes, I can get on with her," said John. In fact John was one of those so much to women that his path of virtue in regard to them always ran down hill. Mrs. Follingsbee was handsome and had a gift of language and some considerable tact in adapting herself to her society; and, as she put forth all her powers to win her admiration, she succeeded.

Grace had done her part to assist John in his hospitable intents, by securing the prompt co-operation of the Fergusons.—The very first evening after their arrival, old Mrs. Ferguson, with Letitia and Rose, called, not formally but socially, as had always been the custom of the two families. Dick Follingsbee was out, enjoying an evening cigar,—a circumstances on which John secretly congratulated himself as a favorable feature in the case. He felt instinctively a sort of uneasy responsibility for his guests; and, judging the Fergusons by himself, felt that their call was in some sort an act of self-abnegation on his account; and he was anxious to make it as easy as possible. Mrs. Follingsbee was presentable so he thought; but he dreaded the irrepressible Dick, and had much the same feeling about him that one has on presenting a pet spaniel or pointer in a lady's parlor,—there was no answering for what he might say or do.

The Fergusons were disposed to make themselves most amiable to Mrs. Follingsbee; and, with this intent, Miss Letitia started the subject of her Parisian experience as being probably one where she would feel herself especially at home. Mrs. Follingsbee of course expanded in rapturous description, and was quite clever and interesting.

"You must feel quite a difference between that country and this, in regard to facilities of living," said Miss Letitia.

"Ah, indeed! do I not?" said Mrs. Follingsbee, casting up her eyes. "Life here in America is in a state of perfect disorganization."

"We are young people here, madam," said John. We haven't had time to organize the smaller conveniences of life.

"Yes, that's what I mean," said Mrs. Follingsbee. "Now, you men don't feel it so very much; but in fact here in America no poor women. Life here in America is perfect slavery to women,—a perfect dead grind. You see there's no career at all for a married woman in this country, as there is in France. Marriage there opens a brilliant prospect before a girl; it introduces her to the world; it gives her wings. In America, it is clipping her wings, chaining her down, shutting her up,—no more gaiety, no more admiration; nothing but cradles and cribs, and bibs and tuckers little narrowing, wearing, domestic cares, hard, vulgar domestic slaveries; and so our women lose their bloom and health and freshness, and are moped to death."

"I can't see the thing in that light, Mrs. Follingsbee," said old Mrs. Ferguson. "I don't understand this modern talk. I am sure, for one, I can say I have had all the career I wanted ever since I married. You know, dear, when one begins to have children, one's heart goes into them: we find nothing hard that we do for the dear little things. I've heard that the Parisian ladies never nurse their own babies. From my very heart, I pity them."

"Oh, my dear madam!" said Mrs. Follingsbee, "why insist upon it that a cultivated, intelligent woman shall waste some of the most beautiful years of her life in a mere animal function, that, after all, any healthy peasant can perform better than she? The French are a philosophical nation; and, in Paris, you see, this thing is all systematic; it's altogether better for the child. It's taken to the country, and put to nurse with a good strong woman, who makes that her only business. She just lives to be a good animal, you see, and so is a better one than a more intellectual being can be; then she gives the child a strong constitution, which is the main thing."

"Yes," said Miss Letitia; "I was told when in Paris, that this system is universal. The dressmaker, who works at so much a day, sends her child out to nurse as certainly as the women of rank and fashion. There are no babies, as a rule, in French households."

The Peterborough Examiner

PETERBOROUGH, DEC. 21, 1871.

To Our Readers.

The return of the festive season, reminds us to some extent of the many changes that have taken place since Christmas, 1870. We have much to be thankful for, and perhaps not a little to cause sincere regret. We have to thank our readers and patrons for their continued and earnest support, and in turn we have done what we could to supply them the important news of the day; to offer them now and then a word of advice, and to do what we could for the interest of the whole community. For their support, we cordially thank them, and solicit its continuance

We hope to issue the EXAMINER in an enlarged and improved shape in 1872. Already we are making preparations to that end, and hope to be ready by the third issue of the year. We hope then to be in a position to more fully merit their interest and support. In the meantime, we thank them again for their past favors, and wish them continued prosperity. Hoping that they may be long spared to enjoy the festivities of these seasons, and that they may now especially have a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year in the truest sense.

The Lindsay Post has changed hands.—Mr Geo. T. Garnett, lately on the staff of the Toronto Telegraph, succeeds Mr Robinson. Mr. Robinson intends publishing the Presbyterian in Toronto. It will appear, we understand, in a few days.

A large committee is now considering the best means of encouraging enlargement of the present Manufacturing establishments in or near the Town, and also the wisdom of offering inducements to parties to come and erect others. We hope they may be successful. We intended to refer to this some time since, but other matters prevented us.

FIREMAN'S CONVERSAZIONE.—This Entertainment for the Benevolent fund of the Brigade, will take place on Friday evening, the 29th instant. We anticipate an excellent programme, which will be out immediately.

The Fire Company will meet on Tuesday evening, 26th inst., when a full attendance is requested.

SUICIDE IN GRAND TRUNK CARS.—On the 15 Instant while the Express was at or near Cobourg, an old man 60 years of age, from Tenessee, shot himself. On the 16th, at the same place, a man named Levi Gaskett, of Jones Co'y. Iowa, shot himself in the Grand Trunk passenger Car—He died in four hours, about 63 dollars in green backs were found on his person. In the case of the old man, $2009 were found in his possession.

MAYOR.—Geo. A. Cox, Esqr., was duly elected Mayor, on Monday, by acclamation Mayor Scott resigning, having been elected to fill the honorable position of Civic head of the Town for the past 6 years.—Mr. Cox, will, we trust, fill the office with honor to himself and credit to the Town.

It was reported quietly last week that Mr. Carnegie aspired to the Mayor's Chair, and was secretly trying to get Mayor Scott to resign at the last moment so as to spring his name on the Electors. Mr. Cox, coming forward, his little game, however, was upset. We can hardly think that Mr. Scott would lend himself to such a trick. He is shrewd enough to know that it could not be successful.

A MUSICAL TREAT.—Peters' Musical Monthly for January comes to us in a new dress. It is printed on thicker paper, and is in every respect superior to its many predecessors. The selections are evidently made with great care, and it is really wonderful how few poor pieces appear among the hundreds that are given. Volume IX commences with the January number. Price 30 cents; or $3 per year. The publisher offers six back numbers for $1, and we advise all our Musical readers to take advantage of the offer. Address, J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, New-York.

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE FOR 1872.—The first edition of two hundred thousand copies just published. It is elegantly printed on fine tinted paper, in two colors, and illustrated with over three hundred Engravings of flowers and vegetables, and two colored plates. The most beautiful and instructive catalogue and floral guide in the world—112 pages, giving thorough directions for the culture of flowers and vegetables, ornamenting grounds making walks, &c.

A Christmas present for my customers, put forwarded to any who apply by mail, for ten cents, only one-quarter the cost. Address, James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

The Prince Wales is convalescent. This will be received with pleasure throughout the Empire, and in other lands.

The Examination of Teachers commenced on Monday at two O'clock, in the Union School buildings. There were between fifty and sixty candidates present. For second class honors six—the remainder for third class. Many of them are coming forward for the first time, while a great many have taught only one or two years and hence cannot obtain a higher grade than a third class certificate, as to obtain even a third class certificate the candidate must have taught at least three years.—Many good teachers are leaving the profession because of the action of Dr. Ryerson, as he is considered the School Law, and Council of Public Instruction—and Inspectors combined—a Dictator in Educational matters.

WHAT IS TRUTH? is a question the Editor of the Review has yet to learn; the answer he may yet know—but so far he is a stranger to it. In his one-sided report of the late Public Meeting, he says Mr. J. Stratton seconded the resolution moved by Sheriff Hall, Mr. Stevenson refusing to do so. Now there is not a word of truth in this. Mr. Stratton did not either move or second the resolution, but he would have done either, if requested, and has just as good a right to move or second a resolution as the Editor of the Review.—It is very strange indeed if Sheriff Hall, who has a very large property at stake in the Town, does not know what is for the general interest. Mr. Stratton, too, has a large interest in Town. He intends remaining in it a few years if the Review will graciously permit it, and he hopes to be able to pay his share of the taxes. He has no Gas Works to fall back on, it is true—nor has he any desire for such works, they smell too bad for his olfactory nerves. It must be a bad case, indeed, that requires a lying report to bolster up.

Bobcaygeon.

Mr. Carnegie says Bobcaygeon will rival Peterboro. The Frenchmen will board there; the farmers will bring their stuff there, and Peterboro will be ruined. If Bobcaygeon grows, let it; we don't envy it prosperity; when it is as large as Peterboro our good town will be as large as Toronto.

If the shops remain here, and the lumbermen have their offices here, near the banks, and the fare from the front to Bobcaygeon is more than to Peterboro, the Frenchmen will stop here, where they are hired, and dismissed, and paid, rather than in a village.

The farmers can bring their produce to Bobcaygeon now, cheaper than the lumberman can, but they don't do it, much less will they do it when the lumberman can bring his stuff up by rail, all the year round. The competing market always did and always will invite the farmers.

Did any town on the Northern road over hurt Toronto? No. The whole country is looking for railway extension. Are we the only wise ones; are they all wrong? Oh, happy people! Yet 'tis a pity this self complacency will not prevent others from robbing us of our trade; else we were safe. But if folding of the hands won't save us; let us be up and doing, remembering that if we don't act promptly, others may save us the trouble. The trade of the whole north country, and the lumber country to the Ottawa waters invites us. Verulam and Fenelon are ready to give. Shall we stop them, and turn them to Toronto. Citizens let no petty obstacle or objection stand in the way. You can dictate your own terms; if you give at all, agree upon some conditions; be unanimous, and in union, let us stand; divided we fall.

John Sandfield Resigned.

Mr. BLAKE PREMIER!

Since the meeting of the present Parliament of Ontario the weakness of the Sandfield Combination was very apparent, and their speedy overthrow certain.

All their boasting of a working majority of 10 to 17 dwindled down before the 7th of December to two, and the Orgaus, well knowing that these two would become more than 10 against them, boasted that Sandfield would hold on with a majority against him. They knew his strong love for office and power—they were well aware of his (perhaps better term) intense desire to manipulate the $1,500,000, and their readiness to lick the dust rather than give up the sweets of office. Many offices had to be filled—partizans had to be provided for—political supporters had to be portioned off in their estimation—and hence their patriotic desire to control affairs a while longer.

They were disappointed when they found that the speaker would be unopposed. They fondly hoped they would have an opportunity of shouting "factionists"—but how great their disappointment? Mr. Blake was prepared to meet the House on great principles—not on the paltry affair of speaker. And accordingly when Mr. Scott was elected speaker, the Combinationists (foolish creatures) imagined the leaky ship sufficient to be called to face another storm of an indulgent people. In vain were they reminded that the last election told strongly against Combinations and Coalitions. They fondly imagined that John Sandfield would take up John A's tactics and bring up at any price followers enough to retain power. Little care they that such a system was sure to destroy public morality, to undermine all political honesty, and destroy the usual confidence reposed in public men. They cared for none of these things provided they could secure their accustomed pap Mr. Blake, however, know the people of Ontario better than to suppose for a moment that these things would be permitted to continue.

His first motion was directed against the voting of large sums of money into the hands of the Government to be spent where they pleased—remembering that by this means the support of the County of Hastings had been secured—and remembering too, the policy of the Government implied in the expression—what the——has Strathroy done for me? the Opposition desired to do away with this purchase system, and to establish a pure and just regard for the interests of every portion of the Province, as determined by the House.

On Mr. Blake's motion, viz:—

"But we feel bound to take the earliest opportunity of informing your Excellency that we regret the course taken by the Legislative Assembly last session under the guidance of your present Ministers in reference to the large powers given to the Executive at the disposition of the Railway Aid Fund, and to state that in our opinion the proposal of the Government to aid any railway should be submitted for the approval or rejection of the Legislative Assembly, so as not to leave so large a sum as $1,500,000 at the disposal of the Executive without a vote of this House appropriating the same upon particular works."

John Sandfield moved an adjournment to the debate on the address on this motion, which was lost by 39 to 34.

Mr. Blake's motion was then carried by 40 to 36.

The Ministry refusing to look upon this as a vote of want of confidence, and asserting that they would not resign till the vacant seats were filled: Mr. McKenzie moved a vote of non confidence, which was carried by a vote of 37 to 35.

John Sandfield was still willing to hold on—but Mr. Wood, Treasurer, resigned, not allowing himself to be drawn through the mire any longer. John Sandfield however, carried the address as amended to the Governor, and next day Mr. Speaker read the reply, which was as follows:—

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly.—

I thank you for your dutiful and loyal Address and the assurances that the important subject submitted to you will receive your best attention. With reference to that portion of the answer to the Speech which expresses a disapproval by the Legislative Assembly of the large powers given to the executive, under the act passed by the Legislature, appropriating one million and a half of dollars in aid of railways in which I am informed that the House has no confidence in a Ministry which has attempted to carry out in reference to the control of the said appropriation, an usurpation fraught with danger to public liberty and constitutional Government. I have to observe that, no action has been taken by advisers in regard to the distribution of any portion of the said fund, except in accordance with the powers vested in them by my advisers of the act referred to, and that I will give every constitutional consideration to any bill that may be presented to me for my sanction; either reappealing or amending the said act.

(Signed) W. P HOWLAND.

Mr. Blake then moved an address to the Lieut. Governor stating—

"That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor representing—

"That this House was invited, by His Excellency's Ministers to consider the various speech of His Excellency delivered at the opening of the session, and to proceed with the work of the Assembly, notwithstanding that some of the constituencies were unrepresented.

"That this House was thus declared to be, as in fact it was and is, competent in its present state to deal with all questions which might be brought before it.

"The discussion of the proposed Address in reply to His Excellency's gracious speech involved the question of the approval or condemnation of the policy of Ministers, and they themselves, in the course of the debate, challenged an expression of the feeling of the house towards them.

"That Ministers have been defeated in each of their four divisions which have taken place, and have never had control of the House.

"That the Ministerial policy on a most important question has been condemned and reversed by a decisive vote of this House which has declared its want of confidence in Ministers.

"That the Provincial Treasurer has in consequence of the hostile attitude of the House, resigned his office.

"That the continuance in office of the remaining Ministers is under existing circumstances at variance with the spirit of the constitution.

"That the supplies voted by this House will lapse on the 31st day of December instant, and this House would be wanting to do its duty if it should not before that time (as was done under like circumstances last year) make provision for the expenditure, under Ministers possessing its confidence, of the moneys necessary to to carry on the public service until the final estimates for the ensuing year can be voted.

"That this House regrets that the remaining Ministers should have advised His Excellency to continue them in office, and humbly prayes that His Excellency will be graciously pleased to consider the representations contained in the Address."

This was carried by a vote of 44 to 26—leaving the Government in a minority of 19.

On Tuesday evening Sandfield resigned, compelled by such a stunning revulsion of public feeling, and Mr. Blake was sent for a short time afterwards. The Combination is therefore at an end.

Up to going to press, we have not learned the names of the new Ministry.

ships, and superior land to not a few of the neighbourhood of Lake Ontario. A Railway to Haliburton would raise the price of land from $1.50 per acre to its price now asked by the English Land Company, to $10 per acre, and cheap at that. Therefore a Railway is sure to be made into this part of the country soon, and I intend to be the person to make it. This was my first visit to Haliburton, but I hope it will not be the last. We met a great many old faces from Peterboro that had worked for me on the Railways many years ago, who have taken up farms in the Township of Dysart, and they all said they were doing well and very well satisfied with their lot. Haliburton is very prettily situated at the head of a pretty little Lake, and must be a very pretty place in Summer time with their Steamboat running on a chain of little lakes for a distance of about 20 miles, which will be very nice for pleasure parties when the R. R. is built.

Yours Truly,
JOHN FOWLER.

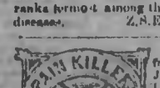
Don't Know What to Do.

We sometimes hear persons say, 'our horse is sadly out of condition, and I cannot tell what is the matter with him, or how to get him into better order;' they appear to be ignorant of the fact that there is within their reach a remedy safe, sure, and effectual in all cases. Many people who deal in horse use large quantities of it, and testify that it's effects are most satisfactory. One horse dealer informs us that his horses condition and appearance are so much improved by it's use that they will sell more readily and for higher prices. The article is 'Carley's Condition Powder and Arabian Heave Remedy.'

Remember the name and see that signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Every farmer who has a good stock of horses, cattle and sheep, and intends to keep them through the winter, should get at once a good stock of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders. One dollar worth will save at least a half ton of hay.

For several months past I have used Fellows Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites in the treatment of Incipient Phthisis Bronchitis, and other affections of the Chest, and I have no hesitation in stating that it ranks foremost among the remedies in those diseases. Z. S. EAKLE, Jr., M.D.



Husband (Returned from a call on Judge Jones). Well Mary, I have examined those certificates and found them straight as a string, there are so many imitations and counterfeits sticking like barnacles to every good medicine that I have learned to look upon the good and bad as one alike. It is very wrong however, this Pain-Killer of Perry Davis has stood the test of time. Doctors and Druggists have not been able to bush it up, it's as you say, Mary in everybody's house and I am astonished to find it has been doing such a world of good about here and we have known nothing about it.

Wife.—It must have cured somebody's complaint or you would not have been converted so easily.

Husband.—Converted, why it has cured a dozen of cases about here within a year, Simon Hobby who you know used to be such an awful sufferer with it and was laid up half the time, why it was this same Perry Davis' Pain-Killer that cured him. Geo Trotter who Doctor Squills used to physic so much and call such a great scientific, he too was cured with the Pain-Killer and what more he writes that he paid Doctors Bills over one hundred Dollars for attending him and was growing worse all the while, here read this letter of it's own, which I got at once I am through with squills if Pain-Killer can't cure me nothing will I am convinced of that.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' Eclectric Oil, purely a preparation of six of nature's best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific men know that medicines must be formed of several ingredients in certain united proportions of greater power and prolonging effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

D. 1870; entitled:

A By-law to aid and assist the Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, by giving the sum of Forty Thousand Dollars, in debentures, by way of bonus to the Company, and for the issuing of such debentures, and to authorize the levying of such a rate as will pay the said debentures and the interest thereon

WHEREAS, by the Act of the Second Session of the Legislature of Ontario, passed in the Thirty-second year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, incorporating the Peterboro and Haliburton Railway Company, it is provided that "it shall further be lawful for any municipality or municipalities through any part of which, or near which the Railway or works of the said Company shall pass or be situated, or which may be benefitted thereby, to aid and assist the said Company by loaning or guaranteeing, or giving money by way of bonus, or other means to the Company, or issuing municipal bonds to, or in aid of the, Company, and otherwise in such manner and to such extent as such municipalities or any of them may think expedient, provided always, that no such aid, loan, bonus, or guarantee shall be given, except after the passing of By-laws for the purpose, and the adoption of such By-law by the ratepayers as provided in the Railway Act."

And whereas, the municipality of the Town of Peterborough is desirous of aiding and assisting the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, by giving to the said Company the sum of Eighty Thousand Dollars in debentures bearing interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, redeemable in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

And whereas, by an Act of the Parliament of the late Province of Canada, passed in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of Her said, Queen Victoria, entitled "an Act to consolidate the debt of the Town of Peterborough, and to authorize the issue of debentures on the security of town property and for other purposes." It is enacted that certain property of the said municipality of the Town of Peterborough consisting of the Town Hall and Market block and the land south of Townsend Street and east of Park Street with all their appurtenances is vested in the Commissioners therein named and their successors provided for, called the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust, and that it should be lawful for the Mayor and Town Council of the said town, for the time being, to cause to be issued debentures under the seal of the said corporation, to be signed by the Mayor, countersigned by the Treasurer of the said Town, and the Secretary of the said Commissioners, and to the amount, and for the purposes and in the manner in the said recited Act, designated, and that it should be lawful for the said Commissioners to issue new debentures, if required, from time to time, upon which to raise funds to retire outstanding debentures, and the municipality of the Town of Peterborough, should annually, upon the application of the said Commissioners, raise upon and from the rateable property of the said town, the interest and sinking fund requisite for the redemption of the said debentures according to the said recited Act.

And whereas, it is proposed to aid and assist the the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company to the extent and in the manner aforesaid, by causing and procuring the issue of eighty debentures, for the sum of One Thousand Dollars each, redeemable as hereinafter mentioned in the manner and subject to the provisions of the said lastly recited Act, as to their issue and redemption and delivering the same to the Trustees, to be appointed under and pursuant to the first recited Act, to be applied according to the provisions of such Act in aid of the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company.

4. That such debentures shall not, nor shall any portion thereof be handed over to the Trustees appointed or to be appointed under and pursuant to the said Act, incorporating the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, and the Act amending the same until after an agreement shall have been made and executed by and between the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company and the Municipality of the Town of Peterborough, embodying the terms, conditions and stipulations upon and subject to which the bonus herein before mentioned, is proposed to be given. Which said agreement this By-law, and the said debentures therefrom to issue, shall be dependent and then such agreement shall be handed over to the said Trustees, to be appointed under the said Act before or at the time of the delivery to such Trustees of the said debentures or any of them.

5th That the said debentures when issued shall be delivered by the Mayor of the said Town of Peterborough to the said Trustees, upon such agreement having been entered into and concluded, and at the time or after the delivery of such agreement to the said trustees as heretofore provided.

6th. And it is hereby further enacted that By-law Number 249, of the said Municipality of the Town of Peterborough, entitled:

A By-law to aid and assist the Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company by giving the sum of Forty Thousand Dollars, in debentures, by way of bonus to the Company, and for the issuing of such debentures, and to authorize the levying of such a rate as will pay the said debentures, and the interest thereon. Passed on the 20th day of November, in the year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy be and is hereby repealed.

FURS---ATTENTION.

The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in furs against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.

Montreal and Toronto shows a good sample of dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.

He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a sale guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.

The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.

I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as strangers, to the inspection of my furs, which are not represented under fictitious names.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic. In, nor was ever any medicine so universally adopted into use, in every country and among all classes, as this mild but effectual purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is a more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cured them; those who have not, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and all know that when it does cure it does always—that it never fails through any fault or neglect of its constitution. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of the remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cures are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Flatulence, Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With each change these complaints disappear.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as this excellent remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a provision against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of them here, or do more than assure the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As its name implies, it does Cure, and does not fail. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Bismuth, Zinc, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, it in nowise injures any patient. The number and importance of its cures in the ague districts, are literally beyond account, and we believe without a parallel in the history of Ague medicine. Our pride is gratified by the acknowledgments we receive of the radical cures effected in obstinate cases, and where other remedies had wholly failed.

Unacclimated persons, either resident in, or travelling through miasmatic localities, will be protected by taking the AGUE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver into healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many truly remarkable cures, where other medicines had failed.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold all round the world.

IRON IN THE BLOOD

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an ailment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalised blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energising effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

The Inebriate.

BY J. B. SWEET.

Oh, these sad repentant moments!
How like the wrath from Heaven they come
How by memories I am tortured!
How they strike me nearly dumb!
I am lost! I'm lost—I'm lost
In the broiling sea of sin;
And my burning heart is tossed
By the surge of grief within!

Oh, these pale and tearful faces
Haunt me ever—curse me still!
And they follow up my footsteps,
Turn whichever way I will.
And I hear the plaintive crying
Of the babes, who call for bread—
And I see my Mary lying
On the pallet, cold and dead!

Give me rum! give me brandy!
Give me whiskey! give me gin!
Mix them all together, landlord,
And I'll still the voice within.
And when thus, these thoughts I've banished,
I will dance, and shout, and sing,
Till the fearful forms have vanished,
And these memories taken wing.

Ha! the fiery fluid burns me!
Burns into my very soul!
Give me more before the surges
Of these memories backward roll!
And I'll bid defiance, then,
Unto all! those faces wan,
To torment my soul again,
While the drunken spell is on.

Pink and White Tyranny.

BY MRS HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

THE FOLLINGBEES ARRIVE.

"And you see how good this is for the mother," said Mrs. Follingbee, "The first year or two of a child's life it is nothing but a little animal; and one person can do for it about as well as another; and all this time, while it is growing physically, the mother has for art, for self-cultivation, for society, and for literature. Of course she keeps her eye on her child, and visits it often enough to know that all goes right with it."

"Yes," said Miss Letitia; "and the same philosophical spirit regulates the education of the child throughout. An American gentleman, who wished to live in Paris, told me that having searched all over it, he could not accommodate his family, including himself and wife and two children, without taking two of the suits that were usually let to the family. The reason he inferred, was the the perfection of the system which keeps the French families reduced in numbers. The babies are out at nurse, sometimes till two, and sometimes till three years of age; and, at seven or eight, the girl goes into a pension, and the boy into a college, till they are ready to be taken out,—the girl to be married, and the boy to enter a profession: so the leisure of parents for literature, art, and society is preserved."

It seems to me the most perfectly dreary, dreadful way of living I ever heard of," said Mrs Ferguson, with unwonted energy. "How I pity people who know so little of real happiness!"

"Yet the French are dotingly fond of children," said Mrs. Follingelee. It is a national peculiarity; you can see it in all their literature. Don't you remember Victor Hugo's exquisite description of a mothers feelings for a little child in 'Notre Dame de Paris?' I never read anothing more effecting; it's perfectly subduing."

"They can't love their children as I did mine," said Mrs. Ferguson "it's impossible; and, if that's what's called organizing society, I hope our society in America will never be organized. It can't be that children are well taken care of on that system. I always attend to everything for my babies myself; because I felt God had put them into my hands perfectly helpless; and, if there is anything difficult or disagreeable in the case, how can I expect to hire a woman for money to be faithful in what I cannot do for love?"

"But don't you think, dear madam, that this system of personal devotion to children may be carried too far?" said Mrs Follingbee. "Perhaps in France they may go to an extreme; but don't our American women as a rule, sacrifice themselves too much to their families?"

"Sacrifice!" said Mrs. Ferguson. "How can we? Our children are our new life. We live in them a thousand times more than we could in ourselves. No, I think a mother that doesn't take care of her own baby misses the greatest happiness a woman can know. A baby isn't a mere animal; and it is a great and solemn thing to see the coming of an immortal soul into it from day to day. My very happiest hours have been spent with my babies in my arms."

"There may be women constituted so as to enjoy it," said Mrs. Follingebee; "but you must allow that there is a vast difference among women."

"There certainly is," said Mrs. Ferguson as she rose with a frigid courtesy, and shortened the call. "My dear girls," said the old lady to her daughters, when they returned home, "I disapprove of that woman. I am very sorry that pretty little Mrs. Seym ur has so bad a friend and adviser. Why, the woman talks like a Feejee islander! Baby a mere animal, to be sure! it puts me out of temper to hear such talk. The woman talks as if she never heard of such a thing as love in her life, and don't know what it means."

"O, well, mamma!" said Rose, "you know we are old-fashioned folks, and not up to modern improvements."

"Well," said Miss Letitia, "I should think that poor little weired child of Mrs. Follingebee's with the great red bow on her back, had been brought up on this system. Yesterday afternoon I saw her in the garden, with that maid of hers, apparently enjoying a free fight. They looked like a pair of goblins,—an old and a young one. I never saw anything like it."

"What a pity!" said Rose; "for she's a smart, bright little thing; and it's cunning to hear her talk Fruch."

"Well," said Mrs. Ferguson, straightening her back, and sitting up with a grand air: "I am one of the eight children that mother nursed herself at her own breast, and lived to a good honorable old age after it. People called her a handsome woman at sixty: she could rule and walk and dance with the best; and nobody kept up a keener interest in reading or general literature. Her conversation was sought by the most eminent men of the day as something remarkable. She was always with her children: we always knew we had her to run to at any moment; and we were the first thing with her. She lived a happy, loving, useful life; and her children rose up and blessed her."

"As we do you, dear mamma," said Rose, kissing her: "we don't be oratorical, darling mamma; because we are all of your mind here."

CHAPTER XVI.

MRS. JOHN SEYMOUR'S PARTY AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

MRS. JOHN SEYMOUR'S party marked an era in the annals of Springdale, of this you may be sure, my dear reader, when you consider that it was projected and arranged by Mrs. Lillie, in strict council with her friend Mrs. Follingebee, who had lived in Paris, and began to go to balls at the Tuileries. Of course it was a tip-top New-York-Paris party, with all the new, fashionable, unspeakable crinkles and wrinkles, and all the high divine, spink and span new ways ways of doing things; which however, like the Eleusinian mysteries, being in their very nature incommunicable except to the elect, must be left to the imagination.

A French artiste, whom Mrs. Follingebee patronized as "my confectioner," came in state to Springdale, with a retinue of appendages and servants sufficient for a circus; took formal possession of the Seymour mansion, and became for the time being, absolute dictator, as was customary in the old Roman Republic in times of emergency.

Mr. Follingebee was forward, fussy, and advisory, in his own peculiar free-and-easy fashion; and Mrs. Follingebee was instructive and patronizing to the very last degree. Lillie had bewailed in her sympathizings touson John's unaccountable and most singular moral Quixotism in regard to the wine question, and been comforted by her appreciative discourse. Mrs. Follingebee had a sort of indefinite faith in French phrases for mending all the broken places in life. A thing said partly in French became at once in her view elucidated, even though the words meant no more than the same in English; so she consoled Lillie as follows:

"Oh, ma chere! I understand perfectly; your husband may be 'un peu borne,' as they say in Paris, but still 'un homme tres respectable,' (Mrs. Follingebee here scraped her throat emphatically, just as her French maid did),—a sublime example of the virtues; and let me tell you, darling, you are very fortunate to get such a man. It is not often that a woman can get such an establishment as yours, and a good man into the bargain; so if the goodness is a little ennuyeux, one must put up with it.—Then again people of old established standing may do about what they like socially: their position is made. People only say, 'Well, that is their way; the Seymours will do so and so.' Now, we have to do twice as much of everything to our position, as certain other people do. We might flood ourselves with champagne and Burgundy and get all the good fellows drunk, as we generally do; and yet people will call our parties 'bourgeois,' and yours 'recherche,' if you give them nothing but tea and biscuit. Now there's my Dick: he respects your husband; you see we two dress in his odious slang way, he says he's 'some,' and 'a brick;' and he's a little anxious to please him, though he professes not to care for anybody. Now Dick has pretty sharp sense, after all, or he'd never have been just where he is."

Our friend John, during these days preceding the party, the party itself, and the clearing up after it, enacted submissively that part of unconditional surrender which the master of the house, it well trained, generally acts on such occasions. He resembled the prize ox, which is led forth, adorned with garland, ribbonss, and docility, to grace a triumphal procession. He went where he was told, did as he was did, marched to the right, marched the left, put on gloves and cravat, and took them off, entirely submissive to the words of his little general; and exibted, in a short, an edifying spectacle of that pleasant domestic animal, a tame husband. He had to make atonement for being a reformer, and for endeavouring to live like a Christian, and by conceding to his wife all this latitude of indulgence; and he meant to go through it like a man and a philosopher. To be sure, in his eyes, it was all so much unutterable bosh and nonsense; and bosh and nonsense for which he was to settle the bill: but he armed himself with a patient reflection that all things have their end in time,—that fireworks and Chinese lanterns, bands of music and kid gloves, ruffs and puffs, and pinkings quillings, and all sorts of unspeakable eatables with French names, would are long flood down the stream of time, and leave their record only in a few bad colds and day of indigestion, which also time would mercifully cure.

So John studied his soul with a view of that comfortable future, when all this fuss would be over, and the cost cleared for something better.

Moreover, John found this good result of his patience: that he learned a little something in a Christian way by it. Men of elevated principle and moral honesty often treat themselves to such large slices of contempt and indignation in regard to the rogues of society, as to forget a common brotherhood of pity. It is sometimes wholesale for such men to belong, to tole rate a scramp to the extent of exchanging with him the ordinary benevolence of social life.

John in discharging the duty of a host to Dick Follingebee, found himself, after a while, looking on him with pity, as a poor creature, like the rich fool in the Gospel, without faith, or love, or prayer; spending life as a moth does,—in vain attempts to burn himself up in the candle, and knowing nothing better. In fact, after a while, the stiff, tow-colored moustache, smart stride, and flippant air of this poor little man struck him somewhere in the region between a smile and a tear; and his enforced hospitality began to wear a tincture of real kindness. There is no less pathos in moral than in physical imbecility.

It is an observable social phenomenon that, when any family in a community makes an advance very greatly ahead of its neighbors in style of living or splendor of entertainments, the fact causes great searchings of spirit in all the region round about and abundance of talk, wherein the thoughts of many hearts are revealed.

Springdale was a country town, containing a choice knot of the old, respectable, true-blue, Boston aristocracy families. Two or three of them had winter houses in Beacon Street, and went there after Christmas, to enjoy the lectures, concerts, and select gayeties of the modern Athens; others, like the Fergusons and Seymours, were in intimate relationship with the same circle.

Now, it is well known that the real old true-blue, Simon-pure, Boston family is one whose claims to be considered "the thing," and the only thing, aye somewhat like the claim of apostolic succession in ancient churches. It is easy to see why certain affluent, cultivated, and eminently well conducted people should be considered "the thing" in their day and generation; but why they should be considered the "only thing" is the point insoluble to human reason, and to be received by faith alone; also why certain other people, equally affluent, cultivated and well-conducted are not "the thing" is one of the divine mysteries, about which whose observe Boston Society will do well not too curiously to exercise his reason.

These "true-blue" families, however have claims to respectability; which make them, on the whole, quite a venerable and pleasureable feature of society in our young, topsy turvy, American community. Some of them have family records travelling clearly back to the settlement of Massachusetts Bay; and the family estate is still on grounds first cleared up by aboriginal settlers. Being of a Puritan nobility, they have an ancestral record, affording more legitimate subject of family self-esteem than most other nobility. Their history runs back to an ancestry of unworthy faith and prayer and self-denial, of incorruptible public virtue, sturdy resistance of evil, and pursuit of good.

There is also a literary aroma pervading their circles. Dim suggestions of "The North American Review," of "The Dial," of Cambridge,—a sort of vague "culture" of authorship and poetry,—is supposed to float in the air around them; and it is generally understood that in their homes exist tastes and appreciations denied to less favoured regions. Almost every one of them has its great man,—its father, grandfather, cousin or great uncle, who wrote a book, or edited a review, or was president of the United States, or minister to England whose opinions are referred to by the family in any discussion, as good Christians quote the Bible.

It is true that in some few instances, the pleroma of aristocratic dignity undergoes a sort of acetic fermentation, and comes out in uncongenial qualities. Now and then at public watering-place, a man or a woman appears no otherwise distinguished than by a remarkable talent for being disagreeable; and it is amusing to find, on enquiry, that this repulsiveness of demeanor is entirely on account of belonging to an ancient family.

Such is the tendency of democracy to a general mingling of elements, that this rigidity is deemed necessary by these good souls to prevent the commonality from being attracted by them, and sticking to them, as straws and bits of paper do to amber. But more generally the "true blue" old families are simple and urbane in their manners; and their pretensions are, as Miss Edgeworth says, presented rather intaglio than in cameo. Of course, they most thoroughly believe in themselves, but in a bland and genial way. "Noblesses oblige" is with them a secret spring of gentle address and social suavity. They perfer their own set and their own ways, and are comfortably sure that what they do not know is not worth knowing, and what they have not been in the habit of doing is not worth doing; but still they are indulgent of the existence of human nature outside their own circle.

The Seymours and the Fergusons belonged to this set of people; and, of course, Mr. John Seymour's marriage afforded them opportunity for some wholesome moral discipline. The Fergusons girls were frank, social, magnanimous young women; of that class, to whom the saving or doing of a rule, unhandsome thing by any human being was an utter impossibility, and whose cheeks would flush at the mere idea of asserting personal superiority over any one. Nevertheless they trod the earth firmly, as girls who felt that they were born to a certain position. Judge Ferguson was a gentleman of the old school, devoted to past ideas, fond of the English classics, and with small faith in any literature later than Dr Johnson. He confessed to a toleration for Scott's novels, and had been detected by his children both laughing and crying over the stories of Charles Dickens; for the amiable weakness of human nature still remain in the best regulated mind. To women and children, the judge was benignity itself, imitating the Grand Monarque, who bowed even to a chambermaid. He believed in good, orderly, respectable, old wa s and entertainments, and had a quite horror of all that was is noisy or pretentious; which sometimes made his social duties a trial to him, as was the case in regard to the Seymour party.

The arrangement of the party, including the preparations for an extensive illuminations of the grounds, and fireworks, were on so unusual a scale as to arrouse the whole community of Springdale to a fever of excitment; if course, the Wilcoxes and the Lennoxes were astonished and disgusted.—When had it been known that any of their set had done anything of the kind? how horribly out of taste! Just the result of John Seymour's marrying into that class of society! Mrs. Lennox was of opinion that she ought not to go. She was of the determined and spicy order of human beings, and often like a certain French countess, felt disposed to thank heaven that she generally succeeded in being rude when occasion required.—Mrs. Lennox regarded "snubbing" in the light of a moral duty devolving on people of condition, when the fountains of thing were in danger of being removed by the inroads of the vulgar commonalty. On the present occasion, Mrs Lennox was of the opinion that quiet, respectable people, of good family, ought to ignore this kind of proceeding, and not think of encouraging such things by their presence.

Mrs. Wilcox generally shaped her course by Lennox: still she had promised Lettie Ferguson to be gracious to the Seymours in their exigency, and to call on the Follingebees; so their was a confussion all round. The young people of both families declaring that they were going, just to see the fun.—Rob Lennox, with the usual vivacity of Young America, said he "didn't care a hang who set a ball rolling, if only something was kept stirring." The subject was discussed when Mrs. Lennox and Mrs. Wilcox were making a morning call upon the Fergusons.

"For my part," said Mrs. Lennox "I'm principled on this subject. Those Follingebees are not proper people. They are of just that vulgar, pushing class, against which I feel it my duty to set my face like aflint; and I'm astonished that a man like John Seymour should go into relations with them. You see it puts all his friends in a most embarrassing position."

"Dear Mrs. Lennox," said Rose Ferguson. "indeed it is Mr. Seymour's fault. These persons are invited by his wife."

"Well what business has he to allow his wife to envite them. A man should be master in his own house.

"But, my dear Mrs. Lennox." said Mrs. Ferguson, "such a pretty young creature, and just married! of corse it would be unhandsome not to allow her to have her friends."

"Certainly," said Judge Ferguson, "a gentleman cannot be rude to the wife's invited guests; for my part, I think Seymour is putting the best face he can on it and we must all do what we can to help him. We shall all attend the Seymour party."

"Well," said Mrs. Wilcox, "I think we shall go. To be sure, it is not what I should like to do. I don't approve of these Follingebees, Mrs. Wilcox was saying, this morning, that his money was made by frauds on the government, which ought to have put him in the State Prison."

"Now say," said Mrs. Lennox, "such people ought to be put down socially: I have no patience with their airs. And that Mrs. Follingebee, I hear she was was a milliner, or sewing girl or some such thing; and to see the airs she gives herself! One would think it was the Empress Eugenie herself, come to queen it over us in America. I cannot help thinking we ought to take a stand. I realy do."

"But, dear Mrs. Lennox, we are not obliged to cultivate further relations with people, simply from exchanging ordinary civilities with them, on one evening," said Judge Ferguson.

"But my dear sir, these pushing, vulgar, rich people take advantage of every opening. Give them an inch, and they will take an ell," said Mrs. Lennox. "Now, if I go, they will be claiming acquaintance with me in Newport next summer. Well, I shall cut them—dead."

"Trust you for that!" said Miss Letitia, laughing. "Indeed, Mrs. Lennox, I think you may go wherever you please with perfect safety. People will never saddle themselves on you longer than you want them; so you might as well go to the party with the rest of us."

"And besides, you know," said Mrs. Wilcox, "all our young people will go, whether we go or not. Your Tom was at my house yesterday; and he is going with my girls: they are all just as wild about it as they can be, and say that it is the greatest fun that has been heard of this summer."

In fact there was not a man, woman, or child, in a circle of fifteen miles round, who could show shade or color of an invitation, who was not out in full dress at Mrs. John Seymour's party. People in a city may pick and choose their entertainments, and she who gives a party there may reckon on a falling off of about one-third, for various other attractions; but in the country, where there is nothing else stirring, one may be sure that not one person able to stand on his feet will be missing. A party in a good old sleepy, respectable country place is a godsend. It is equal to an earthquake, for suggesting materials of conversation; and in so many ways does it awaken and vivify the community, that one may doubt whether, after all, it is not a moral benefactor, and the giver of it one to be ranked in the noble array of martyrs.

Everybody went. Even Mrs. Lennox, when she had sufficiently swallowed her moral principles, sent in all haste to New York for an elegant spick and span new dress from Madame de Fullegig's expressly for the occasion. Was she to be outshone by unprincipled upstarts? Perish the thought! It was treason to the cause of virtue, and the standing order of society. Of course the best thing to be done is to put certain people down, if you can; but, if you cannot do that, the next best thing is to outshine them in their own way. It may be very naughty for them to be so dressy and extravagant, and very absurd, improper, immoral, unnecessary, and in bad taste; but still, if you cannot help it, you may as well try to do the same, and do a little more of it. Mrs. Lennox was in a feverish state till all her trippings came from New York. The bill was something stunning; but, then, it was voted by the young people that she never looked so splendidly in her life; and she comforted herself with marking out a certain sublime distance and reserve of manner to be observed towards Mrs. Seymour and the Follingebees.

The young people, however, came home delighted. Tom, aged twenty-two, instructed his mother that Follingebee was a brick, and a real jolly fellow; and he had accepted an invitation to go on a yachting cruise with him next month. Jane Lennox, moreover, began besetting her mother to have certain details in their house rearranged, with an eye to the Seymour glorification.

"Now, Jane dear, that's just the result of allowing you to visit in this flash, vulgar genteel society," said the troubled mamma.

"Bless your heart, mamma, the world moves on, you know; and we must move with it a little, or be left behind. For my part, I'm perfectly ashamed of the way we let things go at our house. It really is not respectable. Now, I like Mrs. Follingebee, for my part; she's clever and amusing. It was fun to hear all about the balls at the Tuileries, and opera and things in Paris. Mamma, when are we going to Paris?"

"Oh! I don't know, my dear; you must ask your father. He is very unwilling to go abroad."

"Papa is so slow and conservative in his notions!" said the young lady. "For my part, I cannot see what is the use of all this talk about the Follingebees. He is good-natured and funny; and, I am sure, I think she's a splendid woman! and, by the way, she gave me the address of lots of places in New York where we can get French things. Did you notice her lace? It is superb; and she told me where lace just like it could be bought one-third less than they sell at Stewart's."

Thus we see how she starting-out of an old, respectable family in any new abullition of fancy and fashion is like a dandelion going to seed. You have not only the airy, fairy globe; but every feathery particle thereof bears a germ which will cause similar feather bubbles all over the country; and thus old, respectable grass plots become, in time, half dandelion. It is to be observed that, in all questions of life and fashion, "the world and the flesh," to say nothing of the third partner of that ancient firm, have us at decided advantage. It is easy to see the flash of jewelry, and the dazzle of color, the rush and glitter of equipage, and to be dizzied by the babble and gayety of fashionable life; while it is not easy to see justice, patience, temperance, self-denial. These are things belonging to the invisible and the eternal, and to be seen with other eyes than those of the body.

Then, again, there is no one thing, in all the items which go to make up fashionable extravagance, which, taken seperately and by itself, is not in some point of view a good or pretty or desirable thing; and so, whenever the forces of invisible morality begin an encounter with the troops of fashion and folly, the world and the flesh, as we have just said, generally have the best of it.

It may be very shocking and dreadful to get money by cheating and lying; but when the money thus got is put into the forms of yachts, operas, pictures, statutes, and splendid entertainments, of which you are freely offered a share if you will only cultivate the acquaintance of a sharper, will you not then begin to say:—"Everybody is going, why not I?" As to countenancing Dives, why he is countenanced; and my holding out does no good. What is the use of my sitting in my corner and sulking? Nobody minds me." Thus Dives gains one after another to follow his chariot, and make up his court.

Our friend John, simply by being a loving, indulgent husband, had come into the position, in some measure, of demoralizing the public conscience, of bringing in luxury and extravagance, and countenancing people who really ought not to be countenanced countenanced. He had a sort of uneasy perception of this fact; yet, at each particular step, he seamed to himself to be doing no more than was right or reasonable. It was a fact that, through all Springdale, people were beginning to be uneasy and uncomfortable in houses that used to seem to them nice enough, and ashamed of a style of dress and entertainment and living that used to content them perfectly, simply because of the changes of style and living in the John Seymour mansion.

"There's one kind of ship I always steer clear of," said an old bachelor sea-captain, "and that's courtship, 'course on that ship there's always two mates, and no captain."

A quarrelsome were discussing the subject of epitaphs and tombstones, and the husband said: "What kind of a stone do you suppose they will give me when I die?" "Brimstone, my love," was the affectionate reply.

An Irishman, writing from Phila- the other day to his brother, s- completed his house there; "and by- forgiveness to him all I [illegible] nothing of it as an investment, [illegible] about it."

PETERBOROUGH, DEC. 28, 1871.

Editorial Items.

The Prince of Wales is still improving.

The population of Lindsay has doubled during the past ten years.

Wheat brings $1.20 on the cars at Toronto. Dressed hogs $5.30.

Would you be surprised to find that Mr. Gainer will be re-elected Reeve of Minden? Every one says he will.

ASHBURNHAM.—Rumour has it that Mr. Rogers retires, and that the contest will now be between Mr. Dunlop and Mr. Calcutt.

Mr. Duncan Anderson, of Burleigh, has retired, leaving the contest for Reeve between Dr. Clegg and Mr. Golbourne. The people on the Burleigh Road will now elect Dr. Clegg.

The members of Mr. Fairbairn's Central Committee are requested to meet at the Examiner Office, on Saturday Night, 30th inst., at 8 p. m.

Don't forget the Fireman's Conversazione in the Music Hall, to-morrow evening, (Friday.) A good programme will be given.

Would you be surprised to find that Mr Robert Patterson has a large stock of Boots and Shoes, which he sells at reasonable prices.

OMITTED.—The name of Mr. James Howden, as a candidate for councillor for North Monaghan, was ommitted in our last issue. It was by accident as the name was written in interlineation, and not easily read.

We have been told that the indifference of Peterboro has induced the people of Boscaygeon to look to Bowmanville again. The folly of the people of Peterboro may lose to us the trade of the back country.

Would the people of Peterboro be surprized to find Belleville throwing the golden apple of discord into the Railway projects in Peterboro. A $4,000 or $5,000 nut would be worth cracking. Who will get it?

On Saturday, good Turkeys brought 75 cts. to $1.25; Geese 50 to 60 cts.; Oats are now 40 to 45 cts.; Hay is still worth $15 to $18; Wood $2.75 to $3.00 a load; There is no wheat excitement just now.

Mr. Monck and Mr. Lyon; the former a supporter of Mr. Blake, the latter independent, are to contest the County of Carlton. Senator Skead made a telling speech at the nomination in favor of the New Government.

A man named James Kidd, driver, Hartley, brakesman, and Robert White foreman on a train on B. C. and M. R. R., were killed at Dubuque on Saturday, by their train falling through the bridge over the Shelback river.

The Review says "for the best of reasons there was no contest for the Mayoralty." What were those reasons? Would the people of Peterboro be surprised to learn that they were political? People cannot now even go to prayers unless to suit a party.

Mr. Robinson, member for Kingston, was received by a large crowd of his supporters on his return to his home for the holidays. They were accompanied by a Brass Band. Mr. Robinson made satisfactory explanations. During his speech he was loudly applauded.

We would kindly remind all those who have so freely patronised us during the past years, that we are just now going to a great expense to improve and enlarge our paper, and that every dollar due to us will be required for the purpose, and thankfully received. A few dollars just now will be worth more to us than twice as much at some other times.

Hon. Mr. Scott, the new Commissioner of Crown Lands, was enthusiastically received on his return to Ottawa by the Mayor of Ottawa, Aldermen, and over 400 of his old friends. Mrs. Clemow and Mrs. Sheriff Powell presented him with a bouquet. The ladi s' of Ottawa, like those of Peterboro, are somewhat political in their tendencies. It is said that Mr. Eddy will oppose Mr. Scott.

FURIOUS DRIVING.—Since sleighing commenced, people who come to town render it very unsafe to cross the streets. On Saturday last, a boy was almost killed, being knocked down by a team. The driver not even turning round to see whether the child was killed or not. If some of those Jehus were brought before the Mayor and made pay the penalty of their furious driving others might take warning.

Will some one versed in railway matters inform us how it is that in 1870 the Railway to Mud Lake was considered worth $100,000 to the Town of Peterboro; now it is only considered worth $50,000 by the same parties? Why has Haliburton Railway stock depreciated so in a few months? Would the people be surprised to find that this is caused by the change in the Railway Directors.

The Leader advises a thorough organisation of the Combinationists to oppose Mr. Crooks. Faction! faction! It was claimed four years ago that John Sandfield should get a "fair trial"; he got it, and was worse at the end of the term than when he commenced. But those men now urge a factious opposition: no trial for Mr. Blake—defeat him at any cost. So much for Combination "fair trial."

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.—In all the undertakings of men there should be due regard to the happiness of the whole, and in no case, indeed can the happiness of even one person be secured, without adding to the joys of others. It is also just as true, the misery of one plays no small part in causing a like state and feeling, too often to many others, in the varied associations in which we are placed. New Year's season is at any rate a season for congratulations, and expressing at least, a wish for the happiness of friends. But is it not really too selfish to limit our good wishes to the circle of friends only, while there is a much broader field for the manifestation of the higher impulses of human nature. We would, therefore, in the broadest sense, offer to our readers the compliments of the season, and wish them sincerely A HAPPY YEAR during 1872.

We have been requested to publish the following items which have been taken from the books in the County Treasurer's office.

From the books it appears $148 were apportioned to N. Monaghan, for which Mr. Collins was made Commissioner.—There were also $59 of the grant of 1870 not expended, making a total of $207.

June 24,	To Jas. Cunningham,	$10 00
July 15,	" Joseph Walton, Sen'r	20 00
Sept 2,	" Robt. Dunlop, on Jos. Huston, order	10 00
Dec'r 2,	" John Huston, on acct. of gravel pit	13 00
	Total	$53 00

The balance $154 is still in the hands of the Treasurer. We may say, however, that we do not publish this either to injure Mr. Collins or Mr. Tully. We are perfectly indifferent as to who may be Reeve of any of the Townships. We trust the best men will be elected, and that the friends of good and honest intention will pay no attention to those political demagogues who carry their politics into every matter, religion not excepted. From all such we would fain use the words of the prayer—deliver us and our country. Bad men get into the County Council, and into every Council—purge them out, no matter what their creed, nationality or politics

As it is considered the best way to secure the united effort of the Reform party in the approaching contest for the House of Commons, to hold a convention at an early day and agree upon the Candidate in the Reform interest for the East Riding, we would ask the Reformers of the Riding to be prepared to consider the matter in a few weeks, about the latter part of January, as the Central Committee are of opinion that at that time a convention will be held for the purpose.

The success of the party at the last election was secured by a united effort. Let us again prepare ourselves and be united, and a greater success will be the result. Nothing but the good of the party could have induced us to sacrifice our time, labour and loss, in the past. For the success of the party we still labor. We believe that the Reform party is the progressive party—that they are prepared to manage our affairs on just and economical principle, that every County and Riding in the Province will receive its fair place in the Legislature of the country, and that on the success of the party depends the future prosperity of the Dominion.

The battle for reform has been long and keenly contested. Year after year we have been gaining strength. Right in our case is might. Let Reformers do their duty in 1872, and John A. Macdonald will follow Sandfield, and be, like him, cast off. The Reformers of this county, and especially of the East Riding, will, therefore, do well to look about them, and be ready to lose individual feelings in the higher, nobler principle of the good of all.

We will issue public notice of the meeting in convention, as soon as the day is fixed upon.

Manufactures.

Everything that concerns the progress of the town is worthy of the earnest consideration of its citizens; and inasmuch as it is well known that manufacturing establishments generally bring in, and retain a certain population not already where manufactures are not: it is thought that to encourage manufactures, by way of bonus, abatement of taxes, or paying an annual premium, would tend to bring capitalists, who thus encouraged, would expend their money, hire hands, and also secure a profit for their share of the undertaking.

We believe, all are agreed that it is wise and proper to foster manufactures, but all are not agreed as to the best mode of doing it.

One proposition is to grant a bonus, say of $10,000 or more or less, as the case might be, so as to enable some enterprising firm to commence business.

This plan is open to objection, viz.: the party might fail in a year or two, and then the creditors only would reap the benefit, and would, no doubt, consult their own interests in regard to continuing the business. In all probability, withdraw it from the town altogether.

Another scheme is to pay a yearly premium, say an equivalent to the interest on ten or twenty thousand dollars, and by this means be in a position to stop payment as soon as weakness or leakage should be detected. This would be the safest way for the Town, but it would hardly be the best for the person or persons wishing to start any business, as it would afford no capital to commence with and considerable trouble might be experienced in negotating paper, the interest only on which was guaranteed, and that too but from year to year, ready to be withheld at any time and affording no guarantee for repayment of the capital.

A better plan would be to form a large Joint Stock Company of citizens, in which the Town also might take stock, so as to strengthen the company. By this means a large capital could be secured, and the capital be used to erect suitable buildings and supply the necessary machinery as might be agreed upon, and let this be given at a nominal rent to parties with capital enough to carry on a business, if they had the buildings and machinery. Let the stock subscribed by the Town receive no dividends until the other stock should realise say six per cent, but in the general business beyond the machinery and building let the Town be no party. Then if bankruptcy did overtake any one, the Town and original company would own the buildings and machine.y, and be prepared to offer them to any other person or company to commence with. It is true that wear and tear would soon cause a considerable deterioration in the stock, but the rents could be sufficient to meet that, from time to time.

The committee to which has been entrusted the subject of aiding manufactures we trust will give these things careful consideration, remembering that whatever is now done or recommended must be on some general principle, as it would not be fair to consult individual interests only.

Interests that exist to-day may not exist in a year, whatever is done should be done with a view to encourage to the best of our power, every worthy enterprize calculated to increase the wealth of the Town.

EVERY BODY USES IT.—And all agree, that the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" is the best medicine for the instant and permanent removal of pain from the system, ever yet discovered. It acts as a general alterative, thereby removing the cause of the disease, and renovating the action of the system.—For the purpose for which it is recommended, it has equal. Truly it is a "good thing." Sold by all Medicine Dealers.

Union School.

The examination of the various Divisions of the Public and High Schools were held last week. The examination of Teachers being held at the same time disarranged the higher divisions, as many of the pupils were candidates for examination as teachers.

We believe the school is in a very satisfactory state. The attendance is large, and under the management of Principal Dixon the people have confidence that the success of the school is certain.

The Primary Divisions of the Public School were very well attended by parents and others interested in the education of the youth of the Town, and we but speak the minds of all in saying that those Divisions are under favorable management. The other Divisions of the Public school were not examined, as one Teacher was attending the examination of the Board, and another had to dismiss to admit the large number of teacher present at this time. We think that the conduct of the Board of Instruction, Toronto, blameworthy for changing the time of the Examinations, as it must have prevented the people all over the country witnessing the usual quarterly examinations, almost all the schools being closed the whole week before Christmas.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

Principal Dixon had secured several scholarships, in the whole amounting to $226, and on Tuesday evening they were presented to the successful pupils. The basis of success was founded on general proficiency, regular attendance and good conduct marks.

A very lively interest was manifested in the presentation. It took place in the Wesleyan Methodist Sabbath School room, which was filled to overflowing on the occasion. Master Wm. Hunter, who obtained 93 per cent of a possible 100 marks was awarded the first Honor Scholarship, being $25 in gold, the gift of Geo. A. Cox, Esqr. It was presented by the Rev. Mr. Beck, who in a very appropriate speech referred to our Educational System, its advantages and working—and somewhat refuted the idea that it was a "godless" system, believing it as good as could be adopted in mixed communities of Ontario.

Master R. J. Trumpour was awarded the second scholarship—$20 in gold—the gift of George Hilliard, Esq. This was presented by Mr. Stratton, who took occasion to refer to the high standing of the Peterborough School; the efficiency of the staff of teachers, and the general harmony that prevails in the working of the school, and refuting the idea that the town was too high taxed, when the benefits conferred were fairly considered.

The boys in the Fourth Form who deserve honorable mention, are

William Hunter	93 per cent

N. D. Beck	88 "
W. H. Hunt	84 "

F. C. Fairbairn,	82 "
F. C. Mills	74 "
W. A. Stratton,	68 "

THIRD AND FOURTH FORMS—GIRLS.

Miss E. Bagnley, obtained the Hall Scholarship of $20.00. Presented by Mr. Brown, County Inspector, who referred to the education of the young Ladies of the present as not in full accord with what it should be, as there is too little kitchen work, and too much book work, perhaps. Recommending more attention on the part of young ladies to a preparation for the position of house keepers.

Miss M. A. Smith obtained the second, or J. A. Hall prize of $10.00, which was presented by Mr. A. B. Kidd, who strongly advocated a more extensive field for woman's energies and usefulness.

The young ladies obtaining honor marks are:—

Miss E. Bagnley	89 per cent
" M. A. Smith	88 "
" E. Chrow	82 "
" C. Elsworth	77 "
" N. Spilsbury	75 "
" M. Dixon and S. Chambers (equal 69)

FIRST AND SECOND FORMS—GIRLS.

Miss L. Smith secured the Bertram Scholarship of $10.00. Which was presented by J. A. Hall, Esq., who also presented the two next prizes—Miss Ella Brook and Miss Emma Waters (both equal) $3.00 each. Mr. Hall contrasted the schools of to-day in Peterboro with those of twenty years ago, and the opportunities now enjoyed, together with the great interests manifested in the educational work.

The honor pupils in these forms are—

Miss Lena Smith	96 per cent
" Ella Brook	91 "
" Emma Waters	91 "
" Emma Boswell	84 "
" Emma Smith	80 "

PUBLIC SCHOOL HONOR PUPILS.

Mr. Carnegie presented the only prize offered in the Public School Department, Miss E. McLennan being the successful pupil. It was a large Dictionary given by Mr. Menzies, valued at $10.00.

The honor pupils named in this department, are:

Miss B. McLennan	81 per cent.
" M. McLelland	80 "
" Maggie Gamble	79 "
" Mary Scott	70 "
" Christina Smith	50 "

During the proceeding Dr. Burnham, Chairman of the Board, occupied the Chair. He was now asked to leave, and Rev. Mr. Beck requested to take it, and a vote of thanks was tendered to him for his efficient conduct in it during the evening, and as Chairman of the Board.

The meeting was brought to a close by Rev. Mr. Beck pronouncing the benediction.

The donors of scholarships deserve a passing notice, in order to stimulate others to go and do likewise. They are:

Geo. A. Cox, Esq.	$25
A. B. Kidd, Esq.	20
Alex. Smith, Esq.	20
Wm. Hall, Esq.	20
J. Ludgate, Esq	20
Messrs. Chalmers & Hazlitt	20
George Hilliard, Esq.	20
W. Clanton, Esq	20
J. Bertram, Esq.	16
George Burnham, Esq., M. D.	15
J. A. Hall, Esq.	10
J. Stratton, Esq.	10
T. Menzies, Esq., (in books)	10
Total	$226

Of this sum $161 were awarded in honor scholarships, now, and $35 are to be awarded in January, also $30 more in August.

Mr. Dixon is also satisfied that a larger sum will be forthcoming next year, and he believes that those Scholarships will become a part of the yearly announcements in connection with the Public and High School Examinations.

Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. Dixon for the interest taken in the school and in the pupils; in fact in everything connected with the Educational work of the Town. The Trustees and parents find in him a faithful, efficient and successful teacher, and are ever ready to encourage him in every way in their power.

We will look forward with pleasure to the awarding of Scholarships next year, when we hope to find strong competition, so that with the honors carried off, the successful boys and girls may also secure a sound and useful education, fitting them for future usefulness in this life, and tending towards preparation for a higher and better.

The Railways.

The people of Peterboro have always the misfortune of opposition in all they undertake—and the present railway scheme is in just the same position. This is the case with no other town in the Province. Lindsay is one on every thing that concerns her welfare. Port Hope was an unit when their railway was projected, and even until it was carried to completion. Politics were thrown aside by common consent, and all heartily worked together for the common weal. Peterboro, it appears, cannot do so, and hence the divided state of public opinion in regard to railways.

Peterboro, years ago, was in the not anomalous position of some of her public men, undergoing some strange but remarkable changes in a week. We again find the history of those days repeating itself, and not a few are ready to attribute the changes to the same cause—an interested one.

It has been admitted by all that railway extension northward is absolutely necessary to secure the trade of the back country; and the reasons given by the presents opponents of the road while interested in its construction were cogent enough to induce them then to be its advocates. They said there was an immense country north of us getting the lumbermen's supplies by way of Lindsay, that would be obtained in Peterboro if we had communication with the back country. It was also said that if Lumbermen did their carrying trade by way of Peterboro, then they would lay out their money on the same route—their men would go in and out by the same way, and would spend their surplus funds in towns on the track. These are truths so self-evident that they require no demonstration.

You were told by the very present opposers of the road that the road to Mud Lake was worth even $100,000 to the Town of Peterboro, and they were ready to go to the Town and recommend that sum. Now people of common sense must see at once that a road to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls is of more consequence to us than a road of merely seven miles, to Mud Lake, as such a road would tap the country to the north of Lindsay, and take from her the trade of that section of country, and yet the enemies of Peterboro tell us we are better without such a road—in fact that they do not believe railroads are of any benefit to us.

If railways are no benefit to us, was it not folly, nay even madness to spend nearly $1,000, ($785) in getting a Charter for a road northward?

We are also told that the Grand Junction Railway is the outlet for Peterboro. We, no doubt, will be pleased if we live to see that road built, but the chances are that no living man will ever see it completed—perhaps not even begun.

It is, however, not the best outlet for Peterboro. If ever built, according to present surveys, the distance to Peterboro from Belleville is 65 miles. Now will any sane man tell us that railway companies will carry freight for 65 miles as cheaply as they would for 28 miles? not one. If so, then why do the Midland people charge more from Peterboro and Lindsay than they do from shorter way stations?

It will require $1,500,000 to construct the Grand Junction to Peterboro, where will they get the money? The re-opening of the Coborg road is already guaranteed by the Marmora Mining Company, and will only cost $200,000, and $175,000 are already voted by the Directors and the people of Cobourg—the remaining $25,000 being guaranteed by the Managing Director.—Will the people of Peterboro act the part of the dog in the fable, and drop the substance for the shadow?

Why have the promoters of the Grand Junction never come to Peterboro to lay their scheme before us. They have been in Hastings, Keene, Omemee, Fenelon Falls, Lindsay, Bobcaygeon—everywhere but Peterboro. Now, why is this? Surely Peterboro is worth a visit. It is true that some of the Provisional Directors addressed themselves to the County Council, and the result is well known everywhere in the county. But while they were stopping a whole week at the Caiere House, why did they not consult the people of Peterboro?

It now leaks out that the Company have a standing offer on their minute book of FIVE PER CENT premium on the whole bonus, to any and every person who may be instrumental in securing a bonus for the Grand Junction road.

Did they feel so secure in the offered premium that they could afford to let Peterboro, in common parlance, flicker?

They are every one, but one, in Belleville, or near it. For whose interest would those Directors manage the the road? Most assuredly, not for our interest if it should clash with theirs.

The County of Hastings proposes to take stock in the road, we are told on conditions of securing a certain share in the directorship. Will they be in the interest of Peterboro, while not a single person from Peterboro is on the Board? We trow not.

THE CANADA CENTRAL,

At the head of which is Mr. Allan, of Montreal, is sure to come to Peterboro, and we all know that it would be the road for us; as it would give us both a direct Eastern and Western communication, with Montreal and Toronto, and other great centres of trade. Let us get the Cobourg road and then wait for the Canada central.

The Dead Party.

John Sandfield McDonald and his followers have suffered such crushing defeats within the last two weeks, that we may safely say, that they are politically dead.

Mr. Blake has succeeded in forming a very strong Ministry, and with wise management of the affairs of Ontario a ministry sure to meet the expectations so long entertained on the return of the Reform party to power.

The Coalition cry of the Conservative press is merely to blind the eyes of their followers, and is one chord on which they will harp themselves asleep. Well, under the circumstances, long enjoyment of office and consequent emoluments will, no doubt, embitter the loss, and wring forth no melodious paeans, as they find themselves deprived of office, advertizing, and anticipations.

Children are not unfrequently more calm when they have emptied their grief in sobs and tears, and we may reasonably expect after the obulition following their crushing defeat more serious thoughts prevail The Coalition cry is without foundation and goes to prove the fearful straits to which they are driven. Mr. Scott, the Commissioner of Crown Land in the present administration was a supporter of John Sandfield during the last four years, simply because he was pledged to his constituents to that effect.

He not unfrequently expressed his dissatisfaction with John Sandfield during the latter part of the last parliament, and his attachment to Mr. Blake, and his sympathy with Mr. Blake's views. Mr. Scott, even, had really gone over in full harmony with the Reform party, and was only awaiting an opportunity to openly declare his position. Mr. Blake in his address to the people of South Bruce, declares that Mr. Scott has not given up one single principle on entering the ministry; that he was already aware of the wisdom of the course of the Reform party, and at one with them.

The fact is, Mr. Scott is sick of Conservatism, as carried out by the late Ministry, and for the good of his country, thinks the Reform party should have a fair trial.

John Sandfield and his former partizans are endeavoring to blacken Mr. Scott's character by insinuating that he is the paid agent of the Lumbermen of the Ottawa district. If he is, and has been, and they knew it, they were viler than he to make him Speaker. If his demands were such that they could not be complied with, why did they not repudiate the man altogether? His whole crime is that he is the Solicitor of a large firm in Ottawa But lawyers must be a miserable set of fellows if they are bound to act dishonestly for their clients. Surely a Lawyer can be the Attorney of another without acting dishonestly or dishonourably. If he cannot, the sooner we set the whole of the Lawyers of Canada down as a set of rogues and swindlers, and free ourselves of them, the better. But we cannot hold to such an opinion yet.

The House has adjourned, and Ministers have gone to their Constituents for re-election. They will no doubt be returned almost without opposition, and when they return to Toronto, will be able to explain their position to the satisfaction of the people.

The Marquis of Bute denies that he has left the Church of England and joined the Church of Rome.

Twenty-nine hundred licensed dramshops were destroyed by fire in Chicago, the annual business of which was about $15,000,000; thirty-five hundred still remain.

NEW PUBLICATION: we have received the first number of the Canadian Monthly published by Adam, Stevenson & Co., Toronto. It contains 96 pages of neatly printed matter. The typographical work is perfect, and the reading matter is both instructive and interesting. It will appear monthly the subscription price being only $3. per annum.

The recent Canadian Census; the literary copy right question; the great duel of the seventh century, by Goldwin Smith; will appear in the next number. The Canadian Monthly deserves to be largely supported as a Canadian enterprise.

SERIOUS GUN ACCIDENT.—A terrible gun accident happened on Friday, the 15th inst., to a boy twelve or thirteen years of age, son of Mr. Peter Stevens, who lives a few miles west of the village of Minden. In the absence of his parents and elder brothers, the poor little fellow got on a bed in the house, took a loaded gun from the wall, rested the stock on the edge of the bed and proceeded to draw the ramrod. The gun slipped from the bed, and raising it up it was discharged, the contents, nine buckshot, striking the boy on the right wrist, passing upward and completely through the elbow, tearing the flesh from the bones, both of which were broken, and a piece of them carried away. On Saturday chloroform was administered, and the arm amputated two inches above the elbow by Dr. Boswell, of Bobcaygeon, aided by Dr. Carey, of Minden, and the patient—who knew nothing about the operation until an hour after it had been performed—is, we understand, progressing favourably. A correspondent in Minden tells us that Dr. Boswell kindly outlined his charge for the long journey, and some money, and that Dr. Carey made a subscription list for the support and attendance necessary. Independent.

JAS. CAMPBELL,
Teacher.

North Monaghan, Dec. 21st, 1871.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

DEAR SIR,—Permit me, through the columns of your paper, to inform the Electors of the Municipality of Burleigh, Anstruther, Chandos, Cardiff and Monmouth, that I positively decline being a candidate for the Reeveship, for the ensuing year.

Yours truly,
D. ANDERSON.

To the Ticket Holders of the Metropolitan Rink, and public in general:

Having heard it generally expressed that you would like to have the Band of the 57th play at least one night during the week at the rink, and as Mr. Hill said he could not afford to pay what we asked for our services, the sum of 50 cents each and $1.00 for myself, per night. At a meeting I proposed the following which was accepted by Mr. Hill and the Band. The Band to play every Friday night during the season, receiving in return three of Mr. Hill's reserved nights as Benefits, the time to be chosen by ourselves and in the following order—1st, Band—2nd, Band-master—3rd Band. My object in making this arrangement public is, that there will be no misunderstanding when the time arrives for those benefits, as it is the only remuneration we are to receive.

I remain,
Respectfully yours,
A. H Rackett,
Band-Master.

At a negro camp-meeting, in Georgia, the other day, the orator of the day, seeing some of the members had whiskey bottles in their pockets, said: "Thar's some of these here brethren tryin' for to get into the kingdom with a whisky-bottle in their pockets. The gate of Heben's mighty narrer, brethren; much as ever you is gwine to do to squeeze in yourself. How does yer spose yer gwine to get in thar with a whisky-bottle hung to yer?" a member asked what they should do with them. "Bring 'em right up to the pulpit," said the speaker, "and I will offer them as a sacrifice to the Lord." About a half-dozen bottles were accordingly transferred to the pulpit. The darkey gave a short sermon and the repaired to his tent, and two hours after was so drunk that he couldn't stand alone.

Don't Know What to Do.

We sometimes hear persons say, 'my horse is sadly out of condition, and I cannot tell what is the matter with him, or how to get him into better order;' they appear to be ignorant of the fact that there is within their reach a remedy safe, sure, and effectual in all cases. Many persons who deal in horse use large quantities of it, and testify that it's effects are most satisfactory. One horse dealer informs us that his horses condition and appearance are so much improved by it's use that they will sell more readily and for higher prices. The article is 'Carley's Condition Powder and Arabian Heave Remedy.'

Is your throat sore, or are you annoyed by a constant cough? If so, use promptly "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers." They give you instant relief. They relieve the air passages of phlegm or mucous, and allay inflammation, and no safer remedy can be had for coughs, colds, or any complaint of the throat or lungs, and it takes in time their efficacy will soon be proved. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per box.

Persons who have become thoroughly chilled from any cause, may have their circulation at once restored by taking into the stomach a tea-spoonful of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment mixed with a little water well sweetened.

Husband:—(Returned from a call on Judge Jones). Well Mary, I have examined those certificates and found them straight as a string, there are so many imitations and counterfeits sticking like barnacles to every good medicine that I have learned to look upon the good and bad as and alike. It is very wrong however, this PAIN-KILLER of Perry Davis has stood the test of time Doctors and Druggists have not been able to hush it up, it's as you say, Mary in everybodys house and I am astonished to find it has been doing such a world of good about here and we have known nothing about it.

Wife:—It must have cured somebodys Rehumatism or you would'nt have seen converted so easily.

Husband:—Converted, why it has cured a dozen of cases about here whithin a year. Simon Tinkler who you know used to be such an awful sufferer with it and was laid up half the time, why it was this same Perry Davis' PAIN-KILLER that cured him. Geo Trotter who Doctor Squills used to pity so much and call such a great sufferer, he too was cured with the PAIN-KILLER and what more he will be paid Doctor Squills over one hundred Dollars for attending him and was growing worse all the while, here my dear rub some of it on my shoulder at once I am through with Squills, if Pain-Killer can't cure me nothing will I am convinced of that.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL
Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Eclectic physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certian fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alchol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

D. 1870; entituled:

A By-law to aid and assist the Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, by giving the sum of Forty Thousand Dollars, in debentures, by way of bonus to the Company, and for the issuing of such debentures, and to authorize the levying of such a rate as will pay the said debentures and the interest thereon

WHEREAS, by the Act of the Second Session of the Legislature of Ontario, passed in the Thirty-second year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, incorporating the Peterboro and Haliburton Railway Company, it is provided that "it shall further be lawful for any municipality or municipalities through any part of which, or near which the Railway or works of the said Company shall pass or be situated, or which may be benefitted thereby, to aid and assist the said Company by loaning or guaranteeing, or giving money by way of bonus, or other means to the Company, or issuing municipal bonds to, or in aid of the Company, and otherwise in such manner and to such extent as such municipalities or any of them may think expedient, provided always, that no such aid, loan, bonus, or guarantee shall be given, except after the passing of By-laws for the purpose, and the adoption of such By-law by the ratepayers as provided in the Railway Act:

And whereas, the municipality of the Town of Peterborough is desirous of aiding and assisting the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, by giving to the said Company the sum of Eighty Thousand Dollars in debentures bearing interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, redeemable in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

And whereas, by an Act of the Parliament of the late Province of Canada, passed in the Twenty-fourth year of the reign of Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, entitled an Act to consolidate the debt of the Town of Peterborough, and to authorize the issue of debentures on the security of town property and for other purposes. It is enacted that certain property of the said municipality of the Town of Peterborough consisting of the Town Hall and Market Block and the land south of Townsend Street and east of Park Street with all their appurtenances is vested in the Commissioners therein named and their successors provided for, called the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust, and that it should be lawful for the Mayor and Town Council of the said town, for the time being, to cause to be issued debentures under the seal of the said corporation, to be signed by the Mayor, countersigned by the Treasurer of the said Town, and the Secretary of the said Commissioners, and to the amount, and for the purposes and in the manner in the said recited Act, designated, and that it should be lawful for the said Commissioners to issue new debentures, if required, from time to time, upon which to raise funds to retire outstanding debentures, and the municipality of the Town of Peterborough, should annually, upon the application of the said Commissioners, raise upon and from the rateable property of the said town, the interest and sinking fund requisite for the redemption of the said debentures according to the said recited Act.

And whereas, it is proposed to aid and assist the the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company to the extent and in the manner aforesaid, by causing and procuring the issue of eighty debentures, for the sum of One Thousand Dollars each, redeemable as hereinafter mentioned in the manner and subject to the provisions of the said lastly recited Act, as to their issue and redemption and delivering the same to the Trustees, to be appointed under and pursuant to the first recited Act, to be applied according to the provisions of such Act in aid of the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway, Company.

3rd That such debentures shall be issued on the first day of February, 1873, and the interest thereon at the rate aforesaid, shall be payable half-yearly, on the first days of January and July in each and every year.

4. That such debentures shall not, nor shall any portion thereof be handed over to the Trustees appointed or to be appointed under and pursuant to the said Act, incorporating the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company, and the Act amending the same until after an agreement shall have been made and executed by and between the said Peterborough and Haliburton Railway Company and the Municipality of the Town of Peterborough, embodying the terms, conditions and stipulations upon and subject to which the bonus herein before mentioned, is proposed to be given. FURS---ATTENTION.

The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in furs against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.

Montreal and Toronto shows a good sample of dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.

He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a safe guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.

The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.

I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as Strangers, to the inspection of my furs, which are not represented under fictitious names.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the glossy and freshness of youth. This hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this remedy has long enjoyed for the cure of the various complaints for which it is recommended, is unsurpassed by any medicine before the public. Its power to cure the most obstinate and dangerous diseases of the blood, has been proved in so many cases, and under circumstances so various, that we may well believe it will cure every disease of this fluid that is remediable by medicine. Scrofula in its worst forms, Erysipelas, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworm, Sores, Ulcers, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Tumors, Blood Poisons, Mercurial Diseases, Rheumatism, Gout, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dizziness, Headache, Drowsiness, Erysipelas, Neuralgia, Female Weakness, Irregularities, Suppressions, Whites, Sterility, Leucorrhœa, Uterine Diseases, Fits, Kidney Complaints, Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes, Retention, Incontinence of Urine, Bladder Complaints, Worms, Pain in the Back, Kidneys, Sides, Chest, Limbs, Joints, Rheumatism, Gout, Neuralgia, Tic Doloureux, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Ulcers, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Eruptions, Pimples, Blotches, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, Discharges from the Ears, Blindness, Cancer, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Hepatitis, Inflammation of the Liver, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Cholera, Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting, Heartburn, Colic, Pain and Soreness in the Stomach, Bowels, Kidneys, Bladder, Womb, Rectum, Piles, Constipation, Costiveness, Female Complaints, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Despondency, Melancholy, Hysterics, Headache, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Debility, Spasms, Epilepsy, Paralysis, Locomotor Ataxia, Deafness, Loss of Sight, Dimness of Vision, Neuralgia, Tic Doloureux, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Ulcers, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Eruptions, Pimples, Blotches, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other complaints or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Fits, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Nervous affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute Directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Irresolute, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the effects or symptomatic of Weakness, will find in a course relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

FURS---ATTENTION.
The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in furs against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.
Montreal and Toronto shows a good sample of dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.
He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a sale guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.
The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.
I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as strangers, to the inspection of my furs, which are not represented under fictitious names.

Bertie's Prayer.

BY GEO. H. FULLERTON.

In a woodland wild,
By an untrod way,
I carried a child
Of three years all day.

"It is a good boy,"
The little one said,
His eyes bright with joy,
And looked o'erhead.

"I'll be a good boy,"
And louder it is key,
As sailors ahoy,
Would challenge at sea.

"God—I—God" he cries,
As if far above,
Up up in the skies,
Was our God of love.

"I'll be a good boy,
And kiss my mamma;
Give back baby's toy,
And love my papa."

Only this Bertie said,
'Twas a confession prayer
And He overheard,
Ken ah, everywhere.

Accepted the words,
And he blessed the child
Who keepeth the birds
In the woodland wild.

Pink and White Tyranny.

BY MRS HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

CHAPER XVI.—Continued.

MRS. JOHN SEYMOUR'S PARTY AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

Of old, the Seymour family had always been a bulwark on the side of a temperate self-restraint and stoicism in worldly indulgence; of a kind that parents find most useful to strengthen their hands when children are urging them on to expenses beyond their means if they could say, "The Seymours are richer than we are, and you see they don't change their carpets, nor get sofas, nor give extravagant parties; and they live simple, reasonable, quiet entertainments, and do not go into any modern follies." So the Seymours kept up the Ferguson's and the Fergusons the Seymours; and the Lennoxes encouraged each other in a style of quiet, reasonable living, saving money for charity, and time for reading and self-cultivation, and by means and simplicity keeping up the dignity of less wealthy neighbors to hold their own with them.

The John-Seymour party, though, like the bursting of the great dam, which floods a whole valley, became trouble with the family who had to endure it there, like Rosa and Letitia Ferguson, so they swept it out merrily, and thought no more of it.

"It was a pretty and pleasant, and I am glad it went off so well," said Rosa Ferguson, "and I desire to repeat anything not the same. We who live in the country, of the kind, a world of beautiful things and have every day, and so many charming ... in riding, walking and ... and so much to do, cannot afford ... this sort of thing: we really ... time for it."

"A pretty creature," said Mrs. Ferguson, speaking of Lillie, "is really a ... object. I hope she will settle ... to domestic life. She will soon ... things to care for, I trust: a ... would be her best teacher. I am sure ... she will have one."

"Baby is mamma's infallible recipe ... strengthening the charter," said Rose, ...

"Well, as the saying is, they bring love ... them," said Mrs. Ferguson; "and ... always brings wisdom."

CHAPTER XVII.

AFTER THE BATTLE.

"Well, Grace, the Follingsbees are ... gone at last, I am thankful to say," said John, as he stretched himself out on the sofa in Grace's parlor with a sigh of relief. "If ever I am caught in such a scrape again, I shall know it."

"Yes, it is all well over," said Grace.

"Over! I wish you would look at the bills. Why, Gracie! I had not the ... idea, when I gave Lillie leave to get ... what she chose, what it would come to ... with those people at her elbow, to put things into her head.

I would not interfere, you know after the thing was fairly started: and thought I would not spoil Lillie's pleasure, especially as I had to stand firm in not allowing wine. It was well I did; for if wine had been given, and taken with the reckless freedom that all the rest was, it might have ended in a general riot."

"As some of the most fashionable parties do, where young women get merry with champagne and young men get drunk," said Grace.

"Well," said John, "I don't exactly like the whole turn of the way things have been going at our house lately. I don't like the influence it is not in the line of life I want to lead, and that we have been trying to lead."

"Well," said Gracie, "things will be settled now quietly, I hope."

"I say," said John, "could not we start our little reading circles, that were so pleasant last year? You know we want to keep some little things going, and draw Lillie in with us. When a girl has been used to lively society, she can't come down to mere nothing; and I am afraid she will be wanting to rush off to New York and visit the Follingsbees."

"Well," said Grace, "Lillie and Rose were speaking the other day of that, and wanting to begin. You know we were to read Froude together as soon as the evenings got a little longer."

"Oh, yes! that will be capital," said John.

"Do you think Lillie will be interested in Froude," asked Grace.

"I really can't say," said John, with some doubting of heart;" perhaps it would be well to begin with something a little lighter at first.

"Anything you please, John. What shall it be?"

"But I don't want to hold you all back on my account," said John."

"Well, than again, John, there's our study club. The Fergusons and Mr. Matthews were talking it over the other night, and wondering when you would be ready to join us. We were going to take up Leck's 'History of Morals,' and have our sessions Tuesday evenings,—one on Thursday at their house, and another at mine, you know."

"I should enjoy that, of all things," said John: "but I know it is of no use to ask Lillie; it would only be the most dreadful bore to her."

"And you couldn't come without her, of course," said Grace.

"Of course not; that would be so cruel, to leave the poor little thing at home alone."

"Lillie strikes me as being naturally clever," said Grace; "if she would only bring her mind to enter into your tastes a little, I'm sure you would find her capable."

"But, Grace you've no conception how very different her sphere of thought is, how entirely out of the line of our ways of thinking. I'll tell you," said John, "don't wait for me. You take your Tuesdays, and go with your Lecky; and I will keep a copy at home, and read up with you. And I will Lillie in the evening, after the reading is over; and we will have a little music and lively talk, and a dance or charade, you know; then perhaps her mind will wake up by degrees."

Lillie. "Look here, John, I want to ask you something."

John,—putting down his book and crossing to her, "Well dear?"

Lillie. "There would you make a green leaf or a brown one?"

Lillie. "That's just like you, John now, don't you see that a brown one would just spoil the effect?"

"Oh! would it?" said John innocently. "Well what did you ask me for?"

"Why, you tiresome creature! I wanted you to say something. What are you sitting moping over a book for? You don't entertain me a bit."

"Dear lillie, I have been talking about everything I could think of," said John, apologetically.

"Well, I want you to keep on talking, and put up that heavy book. What is it, any way?"

"Leck's 'History of Morals,' said John.

"How dreadful, do you read ... to ...?"

"Certainly; we are all reading it."

"Who all?"

"Why, Gracie, and Letitia and Rose Ferguson."

"Rose Ferguson? I don't believe it. Why, Rose isn't twenty yet! She cannot care about such stuff."

"She does care, and enjoys it too,"—said John, eagerly.

"It's a pity then, you didn't get her for a wife instead of me," said Lillie, in a tone of pique.

Now, this sort of thing does well enough occasionally, said by a pretty woman, perfectly sure of her ground, in the early days of honey-moon; but for steady domestic diet is not to be recommended. Husbands get tired of swearing allegiance over and over; and John returned to his book quietly without a reply. "He did not like the suggestion; and he thought that it was in very poor taste. Lillie embroidered in silence a few minutes, and then threw down her work pettishly.

"How close this room is!"

John read on.

"John do open the door!"

John rose opened the door and returned to his book.

"Now, there's that draft from the hall-window. John you'll have to shut the door."

John shut it and read on.

"Oh, dear me!" said Lillie, throwing herself down with a portentous yawn. "I do think this is dreadful!"

"What is dreadful?" said John looking up.

"It is dreadful to be buried alive here in the gloomy town of Springdale, were there is nothing to see, and nowhere to to go, and nothing going on."

"We have always flattered ourselves that Springdale was a most attractive place," said John. "I don't know of any place where there are more beautiful walks and rambles."

"But I detest walking in the country. What is there to see? and you get your shoes muddy, and barson your clothes, and don't meet a creature! I got so tired the other day when Grace and Rose Ferguson would drag me off to what they called the 'glen.' They kept oh-ing and ah-ing and exclaiming to each other about some stupid thing every step of the way,—old pokey nutalls, bare twigs of trees, and red and yellow leaves, and fern! I do wish you could have seen the awful of trash that those two girls carried into their respective houses. I would not have such stuff in mine for anything. I am tired of all this talk about nature. I am free to confess that I don like Nature, and do like art; and I wish we oly lived in New York, where there is something to amuse one."

"Well, Lillie dear, I am sorry; but we don live in New York and are not likely to," said John.

"Why can't we? Mrs. Follingsbee said that a man in your profession, and with your talents, could command a fortune in New York?"

"If it would give me the mines of Golconda, I would not go there," said John.

"How stupid of you! You know you would love ..."

"No Lillie; I would not leave Springdale for any money."

"That is because you think of nobody but yourself," said Lillie. "Men are always selfish."

"On the contrary it is because I have so many here depending on me, of whom I am bound to think more than myself," said John.

"That dreadful mission of yours, I suppose," "said Lillie; that always stands in the way of having a good time."

"Lillie," said John, shutting his book and looked at her, what is your idea of a good time?"

"Why having something amusing going on all the time,—something bright and lively, to keep one in good spirits," said Lillie.

"I thought that you would have enough of that with your party and all," said John.

"Well now it's all over and duller than ever," said Lillie "I think a little spirit of gayety makes it seem duller by contrast."

"Yes Lillie," said John, "you see there are women who live right here in Springdale, who are all the time busy interested and happy, with only such sources of enjoyment as are to be found here. Their time does not weigh heavy heavy on their hands; in fact, it is too short for all they wish to do."

"They are different from me." said Lillie.

"Then, since you must live here," said John "could you not learn to like them? could you not acquire some of these tastes that make country life agreeable?"

"No I can't I never could," said Lillie, pettishly.

"Then, said John, I don't see that anybody can help your being unhappy." and opening his book, he sat down to read.

Lillie pouted awhile, and then drew from under the sofa-pillow a copy of Indianna; and, establishing her feet on the fender, began to read.

Lillie had acquired at school the double talent of reading French with facility, and was soon deep in the fascinating pages, whose theme is the usual one of French novels—a young wife tired of domestic monotony, with an unappreciative husband, seducing herself with the devotion of a lover. Lillie felt a sort of pique with her husband. He was evidently unappreciative: he was thinking of all sorts of things more than of her, and growing stupid as husbands in French romances generally do. She thought of her handsome Cousin Harry, the only man that she came anywhere near being in love with; and the image of his dark, handsome eyes and glossy curls gave a sort of piquancy to the story.

John got deeply interested in his book; and, looking up from time to time, was relieved to find that Lillie had something to employ her.

"I may as well make a beginning," he said to himself. "I must have my time for reading; and she must learn to amuse herself."

"Why, darling!" he said, "where did you get that?"

"It is Mrs. Follingsbee's said Lillie.

"Dear, it is a bad book," said John, "don't read it."

"It amuses me, and helps pass away time," said Lillie; "and I don't think it is bad; it is beautiful. Besides, you read what amuses you; and it's a pity if I can't read what amuses me."

"I am glad to see you like to read French," continued John; "and I can get you some delightful French stories, which are not only pretty and witty, but have nothing in them that tend to pull down one's moral principles. Edmund About's 'Marriage de Paris' and 'Tolla' are charming French things; and, as he says, they might be read aloud by a man between his mother and sister, without a shade of offence."

"Thank you, sir, for your moral lessons," said Lillie, turning her back on him defiantly; putting her feet on the fender, and going on with her reading.

John seated himself, and went on with his book in silence.

Now, this mode of passing a domestic evening is certainly not agreeable to either party; but we sustain the thesis that in this sort of interior warfare the woman has generally the best of it. When it comes to the science of annoyance, commend us to the lovely sex; Their methods have a finesse, a suppleness, a universal adaptability, that does them infinite credit; and man with all his strength, and all his majesty, and his simplicity, and all his majesty, and his commanding talent, is about as well off as a buffalo or a bison against a tiny, rainbow-winged gnat or mosquito, who bites, sings, and stings everywhere at once, with an infinite grace and facility.

A woman without generosity, who has no love, and whom a man loves, is a terrible antagonist. To give up or to fight often seems equally impossible.

How is a man going to make a woman have a good time, who is determined not to have it? Lillie had sense enough to see, that, if she settled down into enjoyment of the little agreeablenesses and domesticities of the winter society in Springdale, she would lose her battle, and John would keep her there for life. The only way was to keep him as uncomfortable as possible without really breaking her power over him.

In the long run, in these encounters of will, the woman has every advantage. The constant dropping that wears away the stone has passed into a proverb.

Lillie meant to go to New York, and have a long campaign at the Follingsbees. The thing had been all promised and arranged between them; and it was necessary that she should appear sufficiently miserable, and that John should be made sufficiently uncomfortable, to consent with effusion, at last when her intentions were announced.

These purposes were not distinctively stated to herself; for, as we have before intimated, uncultivated natures, who have never thought for a serious moment on self-education, or the way their character is forming, act purely from a sort of instinct, and do not even in their own minds fairly and squarely face their own motives and purposes; if they only did, their good angel would wear a less dejected look than he generally must.

"Lillie had power enough, in that small circle, to stop and interrupt almost all its comfortable literary culture. The reading of Froude was given up. John could not go to the study club; and, after an evening or two of trying to read up at home, he used to stay an hour later at his office. Lillie would go up with him on Tuesday evening, after the readings were over; and then it was understood that all parties were to devote themselves to making the evening pass agreeable to her. She was to put forward, kept in the foreground, and everything arranged to make her appear the queen of the fete. They had tableaux, where Rose made Lillie into marvellous pictures, which all admired and praised. They had little dances, which Lillie thought very stupid and humdrum, because they were not en grande toilette; yet Lillie always made a great merit of putting up with her life at Springdale. A pleasant English writer has a lively paper on the advantages of being a "contankerous fool," in which he goes on to show that men or women of inferior moral parts, little self-control; and great selfishness, often acquire an absolute dominion over the circle in which they move, merely by the exercise of these traits. Every one being anxious to please and pacify them, and keep the peace with them, there is a constant succession of anxious compliance and compromises going on around them; by all of which they are benefitted by getting their own will and way.

The one person who will not give up, and cannot be expected to be considerate or accommodating, comes at last to rule the whole circle. He is counted on like the fixed facts of nature; everybody else must turn out for him. So Lillie reigned in Springdale. In every little social gathering where she appeared, the one uneasy question was, would she have a good time, and anxious provision made to that end. Lillie had declared that reading aloud was a bore, which was definite against reading-parties. She liked to play and sing; so that was always a part of the programme. Lillie sang well, but needed a good deal of urging. Her throat was apt to be sore; and she took pains to say that the harsh winter weather in Springdale was ruining her voice. A good part of an evening was often spent in supplications before she could be induced to make the endeavor.

Lillie had taken up the whim of being jealous of Rose. Jealousy is said to be a lyre. We hold another theory, and consider it more properly a sign of selfishness. Look no the-hearted, unselfish woman, and ask if they are easily made jealous. Look, again, at a woman who in her whole life shows no disposition to deny herself for her husband, or to enter into his views and feelings: are not such as she the most frequently jealous? Her husband, in her view, is a piece of her property; every look, word, and thought which he gives to any body or thing else is a part of her private possession, unjustly withheld from her.

Independently of that, Lillie felt the instinctive jealousy which a passee queen of beauty sometimes has for a rival.

She had eyes to see that Rose was daily growing more and more beautiful; and not all that young girls considerateness, her self-forgetfulness, her persistent endeavours to put Lillie forward, and make her the queen of the hour, could disguise this fact. Lillie was a keen-sighted little body, and saw, at a glance, that, once launched into society together, Rose would carry the day; all she more that no thought of any day to be carried was in her head.

Rose Ferguson had one source of attraction which is as great a natural gift as beauty, and which, when it is found with beauty, makes it perfectly irresistible; to wit, perfect unconsciousness of self. This is a wholly different trait from unselfishness: it is not a moral virtue, attained by voluntary effort, but a constitutional gift, and a very great one. Fenelon praises it as a Christian grace, under the name of simplicity; but we incline to consider it only as an advantage of natural organization. There are many excellent Christians who are haunted by themselves: and in some form or other are always busy with themselves; either conscientiously pondering the right and wrong of their actions, or approbatively sensive to the opinions of others, or æsthetically comparing their appearance and manners with an interior standard; while there are others who have received the gift, beyond the artists eye or the musician's ear, of perfect self-forgetfulness. Their religion lacks the element of conflict, and comes to them by simple impulse.

"Glad souls, without reproach or blot,
Who do His will, and know it not."

Rose had a frank, open joyousness of nature, that shed around her a healthy charm, like fine, breezy weather, or a bright morning; making every one feel as if to be good were the most natural thing in the world. She seemed to be thinking always and directly of matters in hand, of things to be done, and subjects under discussion, as much as if she were an impersonal being.

She had ever been educated with every advantage which old Boston can give to her nicest girls; and that is saying a good deal. Returning to a country home at an early age, she had been made the companion of her father; entering into all his literary tastes and receiving constantly from association with him, and manly influence which a woman's mind needs to develop its completness. Living a whole year in the country, the Fergusons developed within themselves a multiplicity of resources. They read and studied, and discussed subjects with their father; for as we all know, the discussion of moral and social questions has been from the first, and always will be, a prime source of amusement in New-England families; and many of them keep up, with great spirit, a family debating society, in which whoever hath a psalm, a doctrine, or an interpretation, has free course.

Rose had never been into fashionable life, technically so called.

She had not been brought out; there never had been a mill-stone set up to mark the place where "her education was finished;" and so she had gone on unconsciously, studying, reading, drawing and cultivated herself every year, with her her head and hands always so full of pleasurable schemes and plans, that there really seemed to be no room for anything else. We have seen with what interest she co-operated with Grace in the various good works of the factory village in which her father held shares where her activity found abundant scope, and her beauty and grace of manner made he a sort of idol.

Rose had once or twice been awakened to self-consciousness, by applicants rapping at the front door of her heart; but she answered with such a kind, frank earnest, "No, I thank you sir," as made friends of her lovers; and she entered at once into pleasant relations with them. Her nature was so healthy, and free from all morbid suggestion; her yes and no so perfectly frank and positive, that there seemed no possibility of any tragedy caused by her.

Why not John fall in love with Rose? Why did not he, O must sapient sense of womanhood! why did not your brother fall in love with that nice girl you knew of, who grew up with you all at his very elbow, and was, as everybody else could see, just the proper person for him.?

Well, why didn't he? There is the doctrine of election. "The election hath obtained it; and the rest were blinded." John was some six years older than Rose. He had romped with her as a little girl, drawn her on his sled, picked up her hair-pins, and worn her tippet, when they had skated together as boy and girl. The had made each other Christmas and New Year's presents all their lives; and, to say the truth, loved each other honestly and truly: nevertheless, John fell in love with Lillie, and married her. Did you ever know a case like it?

CHAPTER XVI.

A BRICK TURNS UP.

THE snow had been all night falling silently over the long elm avenues of Springdale.

It was one of those soft, moist dreamy snow-falls, which come down in great loose feathers, resting in magical frost-work on every tree, shrub and plant, and seeming to bring down with it purity and peace of upper worlds.

Grace's little cottage on Elm Street was interoomed, as New England cottages are apt to be, in tangle of shrubbery, evergreens syringes, and lilacs; which, on such occasions, become bowers of enchantment when the morning sun looks through them.

Grace came into her parlour, which was cheery with the dazzling sunshine, and, running to the window, began to examine anxiously the state of her various greeneries, pausing from time to time to look out admiringly at the wonderfuly snow-landscape, with its many tremulous tints of rose, lilac, and amethyst.

The only thing wanting was some one to speak to about it; and with a half sigh, she thought of the good old times when John would come to her chamber-door in the morning, to get her out to look at scenes like this.

"Positively," she said to herself, "I must invite some one to visit me. She wants a friend to help one enjoy solitude," the stock of social life in springdale, in fact, was running low. The Lennoxes and the Wilcoxes had gone to their Boston homes, and Rose Ferguson was was visiting in New York, and Lizzie found so much to do to supply her place to her father and mother, that she had less time than usual to spe s with Grace. Then, again, the Elm-street cottage was a walk of some considerable distance; where as, when grace lived at the old homestead, the Fergusons were so near as to seem only one family, and were droping in at all hours of the day and evening. "Whom can I send for?" thought Grace to herself; and she ran over mentally, in a moment, the list of available friends and acquaintances. Reader, perhaps you have never really estimated your friends, till you have tried them by the question, which of them could you ask to come and spend a week or a fortnight, with you, alone in a country house, in the depth of winter. Such an invitation shows great faith in your friend, in yourself, or in human nature.

Grace, at this moment, was unable to think of anybody whom she could call from the approaching festivities of holiday life in the cities to share her snow Patmos with her; so she opened a book for company and turned to where her dainty breakfast-table with its hot coffee and crisp rolls, stood invitingly waiting for her before the cheerful open fire.

At this moment, she saw what she had not noticed before, a letter lying on her breakfast plate. Grace took it up with an exclamation of surprise; which, however, was heard only by her canary birds and her plants

Years before, when Grace was in the first summer of her womanhood, she had been very intimate with Walter Sydenham, and thoroughly esteemed and liked him: but as many another good girl has done about those days, she had conceived it her duty not to think of marriage, but to devote herself to making a home for her widowed father and her brother. There was a certain romance of self-abnegation in this disposition of her self which was rather pleasant to Grace, and in which both the gentlemen concerned found great advantage. As long as her father lived, and John was unmarried and devoted to her, she had never regretted it.

There is probably, no way in which we can benfit our readers more than by recommending to them for general use Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. It is adapted to almost all the purposes of a Family Medicine; and as a specific for coughs, colds, whooping cough, soreness of the chest, lame stomach, rheumatism, spitting of blood, and all lung difficulties, it has no equal that ever we saw or herd of.

The propriety of giving condition medicine to horses, cattle and sheep, was discussed and admitted by many of the Agricultural Societies throught the state last Fall, and we believe that in every case but one they decided in favour of Sheridan's Cabinet Condition Powders. Good judgment.

"Healing on its Wings," say all who have made use of Dr Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, and by such use be cured of coughs, colds, bronchitis, sore throat, influenza or consumption. The prudent will always keep this standard remedy by them.

WHY WILL YOU SUFFER—The "Canadian Pain Destroyer" instantly and permanently removes all pain from the system, and is decidedly the best medicine known for the cure of rheumatism, pleurisy, neuralgia, tic douloureux, toothache, chollic, burns, frost bites, &c., and is so cheap that all can afford to buy it. Sold by all Medicine Dealers.

WOOLY HORSES.—Wooly horses are not so rare as many suppose, and such great curiousities either, there are many to be found in various parts of the country, but we doubt if they will ever prove as valuable to their owners as the one exhibited by Durham; we imagine their owners would consider them more valuable without the wool, for this rough and wooly state of the hair indicates that the horse is not in a healthy condition—probably bile-bound, or suffering from some disease which occasions this unnatural appearance, in such cases use 'Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy,' which will purify the blood, correct the appetite, remove all obstructions from the lungs and liver, and give to the coat a sleek and shinny appearance. Remember the name, and see that signature of hurd & Co. is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle Ont. proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

PETERBOROUGH, JAN'Y 4, 1872.

Editorial Itms.

The late Thomas Fortye, Esq., was first Reeve of North Monaghan, and retained the office from 1850 to 1856.

Mr. Crooks is not to be opposed in Toronto, Alderman Harman refusing to become the mere puppet of the defunct party.

OTONABEE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—We have been requested to announce that the annual meeting of the Otonabee Agricultural Society, will be held at Keene, on Saturday, January 13th, 1872.

Mr. Striker has been defeated in Prince Edward by a Conservative, Mr. McCaigue. Mr. Monk, a Reformer, has been elected in Carlton. Mr. Lauder was re-elected, but his majority was reduced from 600 to 100. Mr. McLeod of Durham, a Reformer, was elected by acclamation.

S. S. Peck has been elected Reeve of Minden by a majority of 6.

Mr. Walton's majority in Smith was 34

Mr. Burgess's majority in Belmont was 12.

Mr. Coughlan's majority in Asphodel was 15.

Mr. Parker's majority in Harvy was 6.

Dr. Clegg is Reeve of Burleigh.

Mr. Calcutt's majority was 35.

At the regular meeting of the Fire Brigade, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:

Moved by Mr. Hugh Robertson, seconded by Mr. J. Marshall,—That the thanks of the Fire Brigade be tendered to those Ladies and Gentlemen who so kindly assisted at the Conversazione.

Moved by Mr. J. Marshall, seconded by Mr. W. Langford,—That this Brigade tender to the Rev. V. Clementi, their sincere thanks for his liberal donation to the relief fund of the Brigade, and regret exceedingly he and family were unable to be present at the entertainment.

Can they explain how Mr. Scott became so black in a night? Reports of men becoming grey in a night are very common, but the contrary are very rare. So long as Mr. Scott remained in the Coalition ranks he was a paragon of perfection, but so soon as he changed his views and joined himself to the liberal party of Ontario, h became a scoundrel—the paid agent of the lumbermen—insatiable, corrupt, and all that is vile. If he had remained with them he would have remained all right.

Mr. Scott, is of course, a leading Catholic. Has that anything to do with the abuse heaped on him? John O'Donohoe suffered at their hands in the same way: Are they going to hound dawn Mr. Scott also? It appears like it.

Their abuse, however, is the result of bitter disappointment, and will have no effect on the better judgement of the people.

The Conservative press every where in the Province glories in the defeat of Reformers running for Municipal honors. Just hear the Hamilton Spectator:—

"Mr. W Robinson, who, by some monstrous arrangement, managed to secure his election as M. P. P. for Kingston, and after wards repudiated his pledges, is just now receiveing his reward at the hand of his constituents. He was a candidate for re-election to aldermanic honors, as was also his friend and defender in chief, Mr. Mayor Livingston. At the close of the polls yesterday it was found that they were both ignominiously defeated. The dispatch announcing the fact says:

"The enthusiasm of the citizens generally at the result of the election is very great.—Bonfires are to be built in the different Wards, and the generality of the citizens are highly jubilant. The Ward in which Robinson and Livingston ran is the strong hold of the Grits in Kingston. Their decision demonstrates the feeling prevalent.—Every exertion was made by them to influence the election. All kinds of intimidation were used, but the popular feeling was so intense that it carried everything before it.

"Robinson addressed the assembled multitude at the close of the polls. His language was extremely violent and betrayed the keen disappointment which he felt in his defeat, having represented the Ward for seventeen years. The ultra-Grits are sullen and down-cast. Other Wards have followed suit in ousting parties who were instrumental in returning Robinson to Parliament.

"His resignation as local member is talked of, and if he retains a spark of decency it would be only what might be expected, as there is no doubt if a general vote of the citizens was taken he would not have a Corporal's guard to support him."

The Leader, too, the most respectable of the Conservative Journals of Ontario, was violent in denouncing candidates with Reform tendencies for civic honors. What a pass things are coming to when the leaders of public opinion lead their dupes so blindly. The common sense of the electors of Ontario will surely cry down the unwise course inaugurated by demagogues.

OBITUARY.

It is our painful duty to chronicle the death of Thomas Fortye, Esq., one of our most esteemed citizens. Mr. Fortye was born in Scotland and was brought up to the legal profession. He emigrated to Canada some time in the year 1834, and was engaged with the late Major Hamilton, his father-in-law, in carrying on the milling and distillery business in this Town.

After some time their premises were burnt down, but were rebuilt, and machinery for the new mills was brought out from Scotland by Mr. Fortye, who carried on the business himself, but which like most undertakings of the kind in Canada at that time was not remunerative—in fact, he lost a deal of money thereby.

He was subsequently appointed Clerk of the County and Surrogate Courts, when he removed 2 miles out of Town, and was for several years Reeve for the Township of Monaghan doing signal service to the township and County by his knowledge and tact in Municipal affairs. When Peterboro was constituted a Port of Entry Mr. Fortye received the appointment of Officer of the Customs. In the discharge of the various offices he held, his conduct was marked by diligent attention to his duties, civil and obliging demeanour to all with whom he had dealings with, a strict and unswerving regard to probity and honor. He possessed a sound judgement and a keen discrimination between the false and true. He was a kind and sincere friend, an unflinching adherent to truth, and if of any it may be said of him

"An honest man's the noblest work of God"

Mr. Fortye has been ailing for some time, but continued going to his office, when he should have been at home. Such was his regard for duty that he seemed to feel as it were necessary for him to discharge it, though not necessary for him to live.

On the 28th of December, he was in his Office for the last time. He continued to sink, till on Tuesday last, at 10 A. M., he peacefully breathed his last, surrounded by his affectionate family.

He was born in 1806, and was consequently in the 66th year of his age. He leaves behind his beloved partner and family, with a large circle of relatives and friends who mourn his sudden and lamented departure.

A FEARFUL CALAMITY.

NO MORE AURORA BOREALIS.

The North Pole Knocked out of its Place by a Fearful Collision.

It is Expected that Navigation will Cease—Only Navigation of the Ship of State.

It is rumored that while the Editor of the Review was driving furiously northward, on Monday, with several votes to oppose Mr. Walton, his horse bolted, and coming in contact with the North Pole, the latter had to succumb to the superior force—and of course—of course not the North Pole lost its place, but the Review's Candidate. He placed himself in bad company, and may now justly say, "Save me from my friends."

The opposing Candidates for Reeve-ship are both worthy, respectable men; who should not have opposed each other—and never would have done so, but for the Review's blind folly. They were long personal friends and should have remained as they were—very intimate friends.

If the present Editor of our Contemporary does not soon return to more reasonable judgement, he will have to go to Toronto to manage an Institution where he can obtain the support of a large following of Lunatics.

The Search for the Lost Sailor, Earl of Aberdeen.

(From the Brunswick Argus of 14th ult.)

The papers, a few months since, were filled with details of the [illegible] of this young Scottish nobleman, [illegible] need go over but little of the ground [illegible] has been occupied before. The reader [illegible] recollect that he was for a short time [illegible]dent of Richmond, Me., where he [illegible]t day labour, being occupied during the spring of 1869, in cutting ice on the Kennebec; he left Richmond for Boston to [illegible] the position of first officer of a three [illegible]ted schooner, bound, we believe, to Australia, and it was from this vessel that he was washed overboard and lost, when [illegible] a few days out of port. His family having endeavouring to get track of him for [illegible] or four years, and with that view, [illegible] clue to his wanderings had been discovered, a commission of three gentlemen, [illegible] the tutor of the young Earl and the [illegible] and a Chancery officer) came over to [illegible] country to look up the evidence of [illegible] death, a point of great importance to [illegible] settlement of the family title and estates. Subsequent to the Earl's depar ure, [illegible] heir had died and he stood next in right to [illegible] succession, a fact of which he died in [illegible] ignorance.

The commission visited Richmond, and obtained very conclusive evidence that Osborn and the Earl were one and the same person. When Osborn was about to leave Richmond for Boston, being short of money, he went to an acquaintance there, a young man by the name of Randall, and asked the loan of $20, and offered to leave with him a valuable rifle, Randall to hold it for redemption until Osborn's return—The offer was accepted. Upon the arrival of the commission at Richmond, and when their business was made known, of course parties having any knowledge of Osborn appeared before them, among them Randall with the rifle, which was fully identified as the property of the missing Earl. Another party had a small trunk belonging to him, and in this were found letters from his family, written some years ago, soon after he left home.

A young lady to whom Osborn paid some attention bought forth a picture presented to her by the Earl. The Commission took the rifle, trunk and picture, giving to the young lady another picture of the Earl, and making handsome compensation to parties who gave its members any information. To Randall the Commission promised as good a rifle, in return for the one he had given up, as could be made in England. About two months since the rifle was received, and parties who have seen describe it as an elegant piece of workmanship, probably as perfect in its shooting qualities as it is in its exterior ornamentation. The object in taking the rifle and picture was for evidence, and doubtless the parties surrendering them made depositions to the facts in the respective cases.

Osborn created a favourable impression while in Richmond. He deposited money in the saving bank, the cashier of which is an old friend of ours. This officer at one time who Osborn came in to deposit, pleasantly remarked to him, "You will one day be somebody." "How so?" queried Osborn. "A young man, unlike others of your age, on are taking care of your money," was the reply of the cashier. Of course Osborn's signature to the pass-book was taken as evidence. Nothing was ever dropped by Osborn in Richmond to lead any one to suppose that he was other than he appeared except upon one occasion, when after words which he had with a well-known shipowner there, probably in some temper he remarked, "I could buy and sell him two or three times." At the moment the remark made no impression.

The Paris Liberte states that on Saturday, the 9, about noon the conductor of an omnibus running from St Sulpice to la Villette, was surprised to find, on arriving at the journey's end, the only remaining outside passenger made no attempt to alight. It was however, soon found that the man was dead, and his body stiffened with the intense cold.

A good deal of excitement has been produced in the United States that the famous steamer Florida has been captured by a Spanish war steamer, and carried off in triumph from under the nose of an American man-of-war. The Spanish authorities may get into hot water in consequence of this circumstance.

Massachusetts did a graceful thing in assuming the character of Santa Claus and sending to the "burned out babies" of Chicago, a huge supply of Christmas gifts to fill their stockings. Sunday schools, churches and individuals participated in the work, though the movement, having a Unitarian origin, was shared in most largely by Unitarians. The gifts were distributed through the Chicago Sunday schools

NEW YORK, Dec 28.—A Cairo, Egypt, letter of December 1st mentions a report current there that Sir Samuel Baker and 700 of his men, who were exploring Central Africa and the headquarters of the river Nile, have died of starvation. One report states that the men mutinied and and shot Baker. Another report states that only Baker and his wife are left of the expedition.

The Mexican Government is so thoroughly bankrupt that it has no money with which to pay its soldiers. General Palacio General Corno and the guardian of the empty treasury have made a financial arrangement which consists of making a forced loan upon the merchants Matamoras. These have refused, however, but one excepted to yield before the argument of cold steel. The American citizens, however, confide in the proximity of Brownsville, and the United States flag, which waves over it, as a protection against this exaction. They should not be disappointed.

THE BEST ABUSED OF MEN.—The Tory paper were busy abusing Mr. Robinson, of Kingston, and Mr. Prince, of Essex until they found larger fish, in Mr. Ex-Treasurer Wood and Mr. Scott of Ottawa. Now we venture to say that Mr. Robinson, could beat John A. in Kingston, were an election to take place at once. Mr. Harrington, of South Renfrew, and Mr. Craig of Russell have come over to the support of Mr. Blake, but the organs of the Government that was, are so busy with Scott and Wood, that they have allowed these minor men to escape scot free. Perhaps they don't like to multiply records of desertion from their camp.

The people of the South American States are at last making measures to secure the education of the young—the most hopeful sign which has been seen in a long time. The Assembly of the Province of Rio de Janeiro has passed a law making it obligatory on parents and guardians to send their children to school. This applies to both sexes, and to all parents between the ages of seven and fourteen. The school may be either public or private, but to one or the other all must go. Children whose parents are to poor to give them decent clothing are to be clad at the expense of the Provincial Treasury. This, with the new legislation for the abolition of slavery, will give a new and better feature for Brazil.

COLLISION ON THE GRAND TRUNK.—On Friday morning, while a freight train was standing on the track of the Grand Trunk Railway, at Berlin, another freight train was observed rushing into the station on the same track. The engine-driver of the first train reversed his engine, but had not backed many yards before his engine was struck by the engine of the incoming train. The woodshed was torn down by a car being thrown off the track against it, but fortunately nobody was injured. The express due here at a little after five o'clock was in consequence of the accident about four hours late; the western bound train was also considerably delayed. The accident was owing to the engine driver of the train which ran into the other being asleep at the time it occured. He admitted having been asleep, but plead as an excuse for his unfortunate nap that he had been on his engine for thirty six consecutive hours. He is to be discharged from the service of the company although he has hitherto shown himself to be an efficient and careful driver.

Terrible stories of suffering during the recent cold term are coming from all directions. Out in Minnesota a teamster named Louis Falmer was on his way from Abercombie to Alexandria. Toward night the snow began blowing at a fearful rate, and Falmer, who had hoped to reach Old Crossing that night, lost his way. Satisfied he could gain nothing by going on, he stopped, tied his horses to the waggon, and lay down in the waggon bed to keep warm. In the morning he found one horse frozen to death and the other numb with cold. Mounting the poor brute that still remained alive, he started to find the river, hoping to follow its course to the Old Crossing. Reaching the river bank his horse became buried in a huge snow drift, from which it was impossible to extricate him. Leaving his horse, Falmer started on foot and finally reached Old Crossing exhausted and almost dead. His face hands and feet were badly frozen, his last being the worst. Amputation of one foot at least will be necessary. His sufferings for eighteen hours are described as terrible.

A YOUNG ENGLISHMAN FROZEN TO DEATH IN THE FAR WEST.—The St. Paul Press of Dec 24 gave particulars of the freezing to death of a man at Holy Cross in the Red River Valley, on Saturday, the 10th inst. From a gentleman who has just arrived from that section of the country further particulars are obtained. It was stated that the deceased was a Canadian, which presumption was based on the fact that he had come to St Paul from Toronto. It seems, however, that he was an Englishman gentleman of wealth and distinction named Miles Fletcher, who was formerly an officer in the Life Guards. Mr. Fletcher was a second cousin to the Marquis of Lorne, Queen Victoria's new son-in-law, and is widely known and esteemed in England. He came to America in pursuit of the officehalting after travelling over this country and Canada he concluded to make his home in the Red River Valley, and making up his mind to open up a large farm and build a fine residence in the vicinity of Holy Cross on Red River, in Dakota Territory. The Remains of Mr. Fletcher will be taken to England for burial, for which purpose a hermetic coffin has been ordered from St. Paul, and the necessary preparations are complete. The young man, so suddenly left, alone in the wilderness of the west, [illegible] miles from home and friends, will accompany the body to her husband to its last resting place in [illegible] land we land.

AFFAIRS IN MANITOBA.—By accounts from Manitoba we [illegible] that matters do not seem very satisfactory. The English speaking inhabitants, who are said to be double the number of the French, have been complaining bitterly against the Lieutenant Governor and [illegible] officials for placing persons from Quebec in every vacant office. The complete exclusion of the resident English; and more than that he schools of the latter, which are [illegible] as generous a [illegible] of the former, only receive the same amount of money. THE BRAVEST MAN [illegible] ARMY.—Many years ago [illegible] eccentric gentleman in England left a [illegible] to the "Bravest man in the British [illegible]" The executors not knowing how [illegible] one of its other [illegible] offered it to the Duke of Wellington. He refused it, saying [illegible] had no claim to such title, but if [illegible] would be of any service to them to know [illegible] man who had [illegible] though, performed the bravest acts [illegible] under his command, he would point them out. Colonel James [illegible], of the Highland regiment, who defended the Chateau of Hougomont, and at the gate of the courtyard driving out the French, and subsequently defending it against the furious attacks of Napoleon to retake the position. When the bequest was offered he at first refused to accept it; but being informed of what the Duke had in command this conduct at Waterloo, "That alone was the case," said he, "if he were so, and shutting the gate and defending it was an action that merited such high distinction, then Sergeant Fraser is entitled to one half of it; so it was divided between them. During the Canadian rebellion of 1837-8, the British government [illegible] the services of the brave [illegible] who is now General Sir James McDonell, commandant of the Citadel of Quebec. Thus he served his country faithfully in his youth and old age. Fraser had a great longing to visit the land of his birth (Scotland); and when [illegible] for a night to the bedroom of his host, was found next morning in the [illegible] of death.

DIVERSION OF DUES.—In the last report of the Secretary of the United States Treasury, it is recommended that the [illegible] revenue duties be abolished, and that [illegible] derived from [illegible] imports, spirits, [illegible] and malt liquors. This would effectually [illegible] in the taxes of sixteen millions [illegible] dollars. It is also proposed to relieve from customs by twenty millions [illegible] He [illegible] is to be collected we may learn [illegible] in the Secretary's own language [illegible] respectfully recommend to the consideration [illegible] of Congress a reduction of duties [illegible] to the extent of fifty per cent [illegible] duties on bituminous coal to fifty cents [illegible] to the reduction of the duty on raw [illegible] materials, and to the removal of all duties [illegible] from large class of articles produced in [illegible] countries which enter into the arts [illegible] as manufactures of this country, and which [illegible] are not produced in the United States, and the revenue from which [illegible] is considerable. Such a list, with the exception of articles necessary of preparation, will be submitted to Congress. The removal of duties from a large class of articles used in manufactures, and the reduction of duties upon coal furnish an opportunity for a moderate decrease in the rates of duties upon these products which [illegible] must still be diminished by these changes.

WEATHER, Dec 30th.—The Hon. A. Mackenzie passed through Strathroy to-day on his way from Toronto to his residence in Sarnia. The session was fought a fitting one for keeping time to the ever increasing pace in which Mr Mackenzie is held in his office; although it only became known in the afternoon that he was likely to pass today, a large crowd greeted him on the arrival of the 2:07 train from the east. The shortness of the time prevented any formal demonstration of the enthusiasm of the crowd and the keenness of the cheering that greeted him, but a few [illegible] must have been most gratifying to the honorable gentleman. Present public business will prevent Mr. Mackenzie from being present in the riding at the nomination day on Friday next. He returns to Toronto on Monday for the transaction of business, but his Department will on Friday next be closed, and he will address a meeting at Strathroy. No opposition candidate is as yet named, nor could any one who would have the slightest chance of success.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL
Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Eclectic physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every ounce; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

as their Sole Agent for Peterborough and Vicinity. An opportunity will be thus afforded to procure, at all times, in Peterborough just as well as in Montreal, Spectacles Unequalled by any for their Strengthing and Preserving Qualities.

Too much cannot be said as to their SUPERIORITY over the ordinary glasses worn—there is no glimmering, wavering of the sight, dizziness, or other unpleasant sensation, but on the contrary, from the peculiar construction of the Lenses, they are soothing and pleasant, causing a feeling of relief to the wearer, and PRODUCING A CLEAR and DISTINCT VISION, as in the natural healing sight. They are the only Spectacles that Preserve as well as assist the Sight!

And are the CHEAPEST because the BEST always lasting MANY YEARS without change being necessary.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, nor will ever any before so universally adopted into use, in every country and among all classes, as this mild but efficient purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is a more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cures them; those who have not, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and all know that what it does once it does always—that it never fails through any fault or neglect of its compositions. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of their remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cases are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the box, for the following complaints, which those Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings, they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as this excellent remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protection against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most efficient remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and for the dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a provision against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the lungs and throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of them here, or do more than assure the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As its name implies, it does Cure, and does not fail. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Bismuth or Zinc, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, it in no case injures any patient. The number and importance of its cures in the sickly districts are literally beyond account, and we believe without a parallel in the history of Ague medicines. Our pride is gratified by the acknowledgments we receive of the radical cures effected by obstinate cases, and where other remedies had wholly failed. Unacclimated persons, either resident in or travelling through ultsweish localities, will be protected by taking the AGUE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver to a healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many truly remarkable cures, where other medicines had failed.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold all round the world.

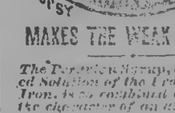
IRON IN THE BLOOD



MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the elements of an active, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nutrient Action in Building Good Iron in the blood, and consequently the only reliable Vitalizing the System. The enfeebled and diseased blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and wastes, removing all morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

FURS---ATTENTION.
The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in furs against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.
Montreal and Toronto shows good sample of dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.
He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a sale guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.
The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.
I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as strangers, to the protection of my furs, which are not represented under fictitious names.

Select Poetry.

The Young Husband's Dilemma.

John had just married and brought home a bride,
A graceful and buxom and beautiful miss,
And when at the altar he stood by her side,
It seemed the last drop in his full cup of bliss.

Her lips were like rubies, her teeth white as pearls
The rose might have borrowed its hues from the features,
The sunlight was mocked by her bright golden curls.

With feasting an I music the swift moments flew,
Till midnight approached, and the bride and her groom,
After bidding their friends and company adieu
Retired—together of course—to their room.

There her beautiful wreath and a gossamer veil
On the top of the bureau she carefully laid,
Then placing her dress with its long silken trail
O'er the back of the chair by the side of the bed.

And then, one by one—but I can't tell the name
Of the various garments embroidered and white,
Nor the feelings that over the young husband came
As he sat and observed her disrobe fror the night.

But many a brilliant illusion, I ween,
The possession of such a position dispels,
To a man who has heard, never yet seen
That wonderful process, the peeling of bells.

So John felt, on seeing these beautiful curls,
These glorious masses of bright golden hair,
And the teeth he admired—they were white than pearls
All laid in a box that she placed on a chair.

Meanlime in that box something more caught his eye,
To show how the artist Dame Nature can mock;
A full and judicious chosen supply
Of cosmetics ad lib, rouge, enamel, and chalk.

Form her cheeks, came her plumbers, which lest she should lose 'em.
She placed in her toilet box too with the rest;
Then swiftly detached the full, pulpitant bosom
Her lover so fondly, so blindly had pressed.

Then she placed on the chair the huge cushion she wore,
When the husband was still more than ever nonplussed,
To see what he never had witnessed before—
A fair woman's bustle abreast of her bust,

Her dissection complete she plunged under cover
Like a lath that might into a rivulet drop;
Then tenderly asked of her motionless lover,
"My darling, how long do you intend to sit up?"

Pink and White Tyranny.

BY MRS HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

CONCLUDED.

"What do you think, John?" said Grace, "we have some congratulations here to give! Rose is engaged to Harry Endicott."

"Indeed," said John, "I wish her joy."

"But what is the matter, John?" said both women, looking up, and seeing something unusual in his face.

"Oh, trouble!" said John—"trouble upon us all. Gracie and Rose, the Spindlewood Mills have failed."

"Is it possible?" was the exclamation of both.

"Yes, indeed!" said John; "you see, the thing has been running very close for the last six months; and the manufacturing business has been looking darker and darker. But still we could have stood it if the house of Clapham & Co. had stood; but they have gone to smash, Gracie. I had a letter this morning telling me of it."

Both women stood a moment as if aghast; for the Ferguson property was equally involved.

"Poor Papa!" said Rose; "this will come hard on him."

"I know it," said John, bitterly. "It is more for others that I feel than for myself,—for all that are involved must suffer with me."

"But, after all, John dear," said Rose, "don't feel so about us at any rate. We shall do very well. People that fail honorably always come right side up at last; and, John, how good it is to think, whatever you lose, you cannot lose your best treasure,—your true noble heart, and your true friends. I feel this minute that we shall all know each other better, and be more precious to each other for this very trouble."

John looked at her through his tears.

"Dear Rose," he said, "you are an angel; and from my soul I congratulate the man that has got you. He that has you would be rich, if he lost the whole world."

"You are too good to me, all of you," said Rose. "But now, John, about that bad news—let me break it to papa and mamma; I think I can do it best. I know when they feel brightness in the day; and I don't want it to come on them suddenly: but I can put it in the very best way. How fortunate I am just engaged to Harry! Harry is a perfect prince in generosity. You don't know what a good heart he has; and it happens so fortunately that we have him to learn on just now. Oh, I'm sure we shall find a way out of these troubles, never fear." And rose took the letter and left John and Grace together.

"O Gracie, Gracie!" said John, throwing himself down on the old chintz sofa, and burying his face in his hands, "what a woman there is! O Gracie! I wish I was dead! life is played out with me. I haven't the least desire to live. I can't get a step farther."

"O John, John! don't talk so!" said Grace, stooping over him. "Why, you will recover from this! You are young and strong. It is that I will be settled, and you can work your way up again."

"It is not the money, Grace; I could let that go. It is that I have nothing to live for,—nobody. My wife, Gracie! she is worse than nothing, worse, oh! infinitely worse than nothing! She is a chain and a shackle. She is my obstacle. She tortures me and hinders me every way and everywhere. There will never be a home for me where she is; and because she is there, no other woman can make a home for me. Oh, I wish she would go away, and stay away! I would not care if I never saw her face again."

There was something shocking and terrible to Grace about this outpouring. It was dreadful to her to be the recipient of such a confidence, to hear these words spoken, and to more than suspect their truth. She was quite silent for a few moments, as he still lay with his face down, buried in the sofa-pillow.

Then she went to her writing-desk, took out a little ivory miniature of their mother, came and sat down by him, and laid her hand on his head.

"John," she said, "look at this."

He raised his head, took it from her hand, and looked at it. Soon she saw the tears dropping over it.

"John," she said; "let me say to you now that I think our mother would have said. The great object of life is not happiness; and, when we have lost our own personal happiness, we have not lost all that life is worth living for. No, John, the very best of life often lies beyond that. When we have learned to let ourselves go, then we may find that there is a better, a nobler, and a truer life for us."

"I have given up," said John, in a husky voice. "I have lost all."

"Yes," replied Grace, steadily, "I know perfectly well that there is very little hope of personal and individual happiness for you in your marriage for years to come. Instead of a companion, a friend, and a helper, you have a moral invalid to take care of. But John, if Lillie had been stricken with blindness, or insanity, or paralysis, you would not have shrunk from your duty to her; and, because the blindness and paralysis are moral, you will not shrink from it, will you? You sacrifice all your property to pay an indorsement for a debt that is not yours; and, why do you do it? Because society rests on every man's faithfulness to his engagements. John, if you stand by a business engagement with this faithfulness, how much more should you stand by that great engagement which concerns all other families and the stability of all society. Lillie is your wife. You were free to choose; and you chose her. She is the mother of your child; and John, what that daughter is to be depends very much on the steadiness with which you fulfil your duties to the mother. I know that Lillie is a most undeveloped and uncongenial person; I know how little you have in common; but your duties are the same as if she were the best and most congenial of wives. It is every man's duty to make the best of his marriage."

"But, Gracie," said John, "is there anything to be made of her?"

"You will never make me believe, John, that there are any human beings absolutely without the capability of good. They may be very dark, and very slow to learn, and very far from it; but steady patience and love and well-doing will at least tell upon any one."

"But, Gracie, if you could have heard how utterly without principle she is! urging me to put my property out of my hand dishonestly, to keep her in luxury!"

"Well, John, you must have patience with her. Consider that she has been unfortunate in her associates. Consider that she has been a petted child all her life, and that you have helped to pet her. Consider how much your sex always do to weaken the moral sense of women, by liking and admiring them for being weak and foolish and inconsequent, so long as it is pretty and does not come in your way. I do not mean you in particular, John; but I mean that the general course of society releases pretty women from any sense of obligation to be constant in duty, or brave in meeting emergencies. You yourself have encouraged Lillie to live very much like a little hummingbird."

"Well, I thought," said John, "that she would in time develop into something better."

"Well, there lies your mistake; you expected too much. The work of years is not to be undone in a moment; and you must take into account that this is Lillie's first adversity. You may as well make up your mind not to expect her to be reasonable. It seems to me that we can make up our minds to bear anything that we know must come; and you may as well make up yours, that, for a long time, you will have to carry Lillie as a burden. But then, you must think that she is your daughter's mother, and that it is very important for the child that she should respect and honor her mother. You must trust her with respect and honor, even in her weaknesses. We all must. We all must help Lillie as we can bear this trial, and sympathize with her in it, unreasonable as she may seem; because, after all, John, it is a real trial to her."

"I cannot see for my part," said John, "that she loves anything."

"The power of love may be undeveloped in her, John; but it will come, perhaps, later in life. At all events take this comfort to yourself—that when you are doing you duty by your wife, when you are holding her in her place in the family, and teaching her child to respect and honor her, you are putting her in God's school of love. If we contend with and fly from our duties, simply because they gall us and burden us, we go against everything; but if we take them up bravely, everything goes with us. God and good angels and good men and all good influences are working for the right. And in this way, John, you may come to happiness; or, if you do not come to personal happiness, you may come to something higher and better. You know that you think it nobler to be an honest man than a rich man; and I am sure that you will think it better to be an honest man than to be a happy one. Now, dear John, it is not I that says these things. I think; but it seems to me it is what our mother would say, if she should speak to you from where she is. Bad then, dear brother, it will all be over soon, this life-battle; and the only thing is, to come out victorious."

"Gracie, you are right," said John, rising up: "I see it myself. I will brace up to my duty. Couldn't you try and pacify Lillie a little, poor girl? I suppose I have been rough with her."

"Oh, yes, John, I will go up and talk with Lillie; and perhaps we will bring her round. And then when my husband comes home next week, we'll have a family palaver; and he will find some ways and means of setting this business straight, that it won't be so bad as it looks now. There may be arrangements made when the creditors come together. My impression is that, whenever people find a man really determined to arrange a matter of this kind honorably, they are all disposed to help him; so don't be cast down about the business. As for Lillie's discontent, treat it as you would the crying of your little daughter for its sugar-plums, and do not expect anything more of her just now than there is."

* * * * * *

We have brought our story up to this point. We informed our readers in the beginning that it was not a novel, but a story with a moral; and as people pick all sorts of strange morals out of stories, we intend to put conspicuously into our story exactly what the moral of it is.

Well, then, it has been very surprising to us to see in these our times that some people, who really at heart have the interest of woman upon their minds have been so short-sighted and reckless as to clamor for an easy dissolution of the marriage-contract, as a means of righting their wrongs. Is it possible that they do not see that this is a liberty which, once granted, would always tell against the weaker sex! If the woman who finds that she has made a mistake, and married a man unkind or uncongenial, may, on the discovery of it, leave him and seek her fortune with another, so also may a man. And what will become of women like Lillie, when the first gilding begins to wear off, if the man who has taken one of them shall be at liberty to cast them off and seek another! Have we not enough now of miserable, broken-winged butterflies, that sink down, down, down into the mud of the street? But are women-reformers going to clamor for having every woman turned out helpless, when the man who has married her, and made her a mother, discovers that she has not the power to interest him, and to help his higher spiritual development? It was because woman is helpless and weak, and because Christ was her great Protector, that he made the law of marriage irrevocable. "Whosoever putteth away his wife causeth her to commit adultery." If the sacredness of the marriage-contract did not hold, if the church and all good men and all good women did not uphold it with their might and main, it is easy to see where the career of many women like Lillie would end. Men have power to reflect before the choice is made; and that is the only proper time for reflection. But, when once marriage is made and consummated, it should be as fixed a fact as the laws of nature. And they who suffer under this stringency should suffer as those who endure for the public good. "He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not, he shall enter not into the tabernacle of the Lord.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

AFTER THE STORM.

The painful and unfortunate crisis of life often arise and darken like a thunder-storm, and seem for the moment perfectly terrific and overwhelming; but wait a little, and the cloud sweeps by, and the earth, which seemed about to be torn to pieces and destroyed, comes out as good as new. Not a bird is dead; not a flower killed: and the sun shines just as it did before. So it was with John's financial trouble. When it came to be investigated and looked into, it proved much less terrible than had been feared. It was not utter ruin. The high character which John bore for honor and probity, the general respect which was felt for him by all to whom he stood indebted, led to an arrangement by which the whole business was put into his hands, and time given him to work it through. His brother-in-law came to his aid, advancing money, and entering into the business with him. Our friend, Harry Endicott, was only too happy to prove his devotion to Rose by offers of financial assistance. In short, there seemed every reason to hope that, after a period of somewhat close sailing, the property might be brought into clear water again, and go on even better than before.

To say the truth too, John was really relieved by that terrible burst of confidence to his sister. It is a curious fact, that giving full expression to bitterness of feeling or indignation against one we love seems to be such a relief, that it always brings a revulsion of kindliness. John never loved his sister so much as when he heard her plead his wife's cause with him; for, though, in some bitter, impatient hour a man may feel, which John did, as if he would be glad to sunder all ties, and tear himself away from an uncongenial wife, yet a good man never can forget the woman that once he loved, and who is the mother of his children. Those sweet, sacred visions and illusions of first love will return again and again, even after disenchantments; and the better and the purer the man is, the more sacred is the appeal to him of woman's weakness. Because he is strong, and she is weak, he feels that it would be unmanly to desert her; and if ever there was any thing for which John thanked his sister, it was when she went over and spent hours with his wife patiently listening to her complainings, and soothing her as if she had been a petted child. All the circle of friends, in a like manner, bore with her for his sake.

Thanks to the intervention of Grace's husband and of Harry, John was not put to the trial and humiliation of being obliged to sell the family plate, although constrained to live in it under a system of more rigid economy. Lillie's mother, although quite a commonplace woman as a companion, had been an economist in her day; she had known how to make the most of straightened circumstances, and, being put to it, could do it again.

To be sure there was an end to Newport gayeties; for Lillie vowed and declared that she would not go to Newport and take cheap board, and live without a carriage. She didn't want the Follingsbees and the Tompkinses and the Simpkinses talking about her, and saying that they had failed. Her mother worked like a servant for her in smartening her up, and tidying her old dresses, of which she would think she had a stock to last for many years. And thus, with every body sympathizing with her, and every body helping her, Lillie subsided to entertaining the part of a patient, persecuted saint. John had asked her pardon for all the hasty words he said to her in the terrible interview; and she had forgiven him with edifying meekness.

So life went on with John. He never forgot his sister's words; but received them into his heart as a message from his mother in heaven. From that time, no one could have judged by any word, look or action of his, that his wife was not what she had always been to him.

Meanwhile Rose was happily married, and settled down in the Ferguson Place, where her husband and she formed one family with her parents. It was a pleasant, cosey, social, friendly neighborhood. After all, John found that his cross was not so heavy to carry, when once he had made up his mind that it must be borne. By never expecting much, he was never disappointed. Having made up his mind that he was to serve, and so give without receiving, he did it, and began to find pleasure in it. By and by, the little Lillie, growing up by her mother's side, began to be a compensation for all he had suffered. The little creature inherited all her mother's beauty, the dazzling delicacy of her complexion, the abundance of her golden hair; but there had been given to her also her father's magnanimous and generous nature. Lillie was a selfish, exacting mother; and such women often succeed in teaching to their children patience and self-denial. As soon as the little creature could walk, she was her father's constant play-fellow and companion. He took her with him everywhere. He was never weary of talking with her and playing with her; and gradually he relieved the mother of all care of her early training. When, in time, two others were added to the nursery troop, Lillie became a perfect model of a gracious, motherly, little older sister.

Did all this patience and devotion in the husband at last awaken any thing like love in the wife? Lillie was not naturally rich in emotion. Under the best education and development, she would have been rather wanting in the loving power; and the wole course of her education had been directed to suppress what little she had, and to concentrate all her feelings upon herself.

The factitious and unnatural life she had lived so many years had seriously undermined the stamina of her constitution; and, after the birth of her third child, her health failed altogether. Lillie thus became in time a chronic invalid, exacting, querulous, full of troubles and wants which tasked the patience of all around her. During all these trying years, her husband's faithfulness never faltered. As he gradually retrieved his circumstances, she was first in every calculation. Because he knew that here lay his greatest temptation, here he most rigidly performed his duty. Nothing that money could give to soften the weariness of sickness was withheld; and John was for hours and hours, whenever he could spare the time, himself a personal, assiduous, unwearied attendant in the sick-room.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE NEW LILLIE.

We have but one scene more before our story closes. It is night now in Lillie's sick room; and her mother is anxiously arranging the drapery, to keep the firelight from her eyes, stepping noiselessly about the room. She has there behind the curtains, in her pillow — the wreck and remnant only of what was once so beautiful. During all these years, when the interests and pleasures of life had been slowly dropping, leaf by leaf, and passing away like fading flowers, Lillie has learned to do much thinking. It sometimes seems to take a stab, a throb, a wound to open in some hearts the capacity of deep feeling and deep thought. These are things taught by suffering that can be taught in no other way. By enduring sometimes is wrought out in a person the power of loving, and of appreciating love.

During the first year, Lillie had often seemed to herself in a sort of a wild, chaotic state. The coming of a strange new spiritual life was something to her inexplicable to her that it agitated and distressed her; and sometimes, when she appeared more petulant and fretful than usual, it was only the stir and vibration on her weak nerves of new feelings, which she wanted the power to express. These emotions at first were painful to her. She felt weak, miserable, and good for nothing. It seemed to her that her whole life had been a wretched cheat, and that she had ill repaid the devotion of her husband. At first these thoughts only made her bitter and angry; and she contended against them. But as she sank from day to day, and grew weaker and weaker, she grew more gentle; and a better spirit seemed to enter into her.

On this evening that we speak of, she made up her mind that she would try and tell her husband some of the things that were passing in her mind.

"Tell John I want to see him," she said to her mother. "I wish he would come and sit with me."

This was a summons for which John invariably left everything. He laid down his book as the word was brought to him, and soon was kneeling noiselessly at her bedside.

"Well, Lillie, dear," he said, "how are you?"

She put out her little wasted hand; "John dear," she said, "sit down; I have something that I want to say to you. I have been thinking, John, that this can't last much longer."

"What can't last Lillie?" said John trying to speak cheerfully.

"I mean, John, that I am going to leave you; and I want you to know that I am sorry for all the trouble I have given you. I think you would be glad to have me say so."

"Oh, come, come, my poor, poor wife," said John, "don't talk so!" said John, putting her hand.—"You must not be mine"

"And so, John," said Lillie, going on without noticing his interruption, "I want just to tell you, before I go any farther, that I know and feel just how patient and noble and good you have always been to me."

"Oh, Lillie darling!" said John, "why shouldn't I be? Poor little girl, how much you have suffered!"

"Well, now, John I know perfectly well that I have never been the wife that I ought to be to you. You know it was so; don't try to say anything about it. I was never the woman to have made you happy; and it was not fair in me to marry you. I have lived a dreadfully worldly, selfish life—And now, John, I have come to the end—You dear good man, your trials with me are nearly over; but I want you to know that you have succeeded. John I do love you now with all my heart, though I did not love you when I married you. And, John, I do feel that God will take pity on me, poor sinful good for nothing as I am, just because I've been pitied and kind you have always been to me when I have been so very provoking. You see it has made me think how good God must be,—because dear, we know that is a better than the best of us."

"O Lillie, Lillie!" said John, leaning over her, and taking her in his arms, "do live, I want you to live. Don't leave me, now, now that you really love me!"

"Oh, no, John! it is best as it is,—I think I should not have strength to be very good, if I were to get well; and you would still have your little cross to carry. No, dear, it is all right. And John you will have the best of me in our Lillie. She looks like me; but, John She has your good heart; and she will be more to you than I could be. She is just as sweet and unselfish as I was selfish. I don't think I am quite so bad now; and I think, if I lived, I should try to be a great deal better."

"O Lillie! I cannot bear to part with you! I never have ceased to love you; and I never have loved any other woman."

"I know that, John. Oh! how much truer and better you are than I have been! But I like to think that you love me,—I like to think that you will be sorry when I am gone, bad as I am, or was; for I trust in it that I am now a little better than I was. You remember that story of Undine you read to me one day? It seems as if most of my life I have been like Undine before her soul came into her. But the last year I have felt the coming of a soul. It has troubled me; it has done with a strange kind of a pain. I have never suffered so much. But it has done me good—it has made me feel that I have an important soul, and that you and I, John shall meet in some better place hereafter.—And there you will be rewarded for all your goodness to me."

As John sat there, and held the little frail hand, his thought went back to the time when the wild impulse of his heart had been to break away from the woman, and never see her face again; and he gave thanks to God, who had led him in a better way.

* * * * * *

And so, at last, passed away the little story of Lillie's life. But in the home which she has left now grows another Lillie, fairer and sweeter than she,—the sweet confidant, the trusted friend of her father. And often, when he lays his hand on her golden head, he says, "Dear child, how like your mother you look!"

Of all that was painful in that experience nothing now remains. John thinks of her only as he thought of her in the fair illusions of first love,—the dearest and most sacred of all illusions.

The Lillie who guides his household, and is so motherly to the younger children, who shares every thought of his heart; who enters into every feeling and sympathy,—she is the pure reward of his faithfulness and constancy. She is a sacred and saintly Lillie, springing out of the soil where is laid her mother, forgetting all her faults for ever.

Carelessness.

Many persons neglect their horses health and condition until it is too late, when at a trifling expense and no trouble the horse might have been saved if attended to in time. To all who may have occasion to use an article of the kind we would recommend "Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy," it is without doubt the best preparation in use, as thousands who have used it testify. Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all Medicine Dealers.

In the mind a ponderable or an imponderable substance; an essence, vapor, or an indescribable something which cannot be grasped, felt or, withheld!?

Man thinks, studies, invents, tires the brain by overwork, and loses his reason, reads his intellect, he sees calm, stars resources, and again thinks.

When we reflect that a power of endurance can be imparted to the brain, and that weak minds have been restored to strength by Fellows Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites we cannot but conclude that the subtle power is really ponderable matter, from the fact that the ingredients are supplied which render it support and give it vitality. Persons who study hard should preserve their balance of power by using the Syrup.

A WORLD IN TROUBLE.—The world is in trouble, nations are convulsed, thrones are trembling; governments are agitated; people are excited, and the whole social organization of civilation appear to be seriously influenced by something prominent; of a great change now for nervousness there is nothing like the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" which also cures rheumatism, neuralgia, tic doloureux, cramps and pains in the stomach &c. Price 25cts per bottle. Sold by all medicine dealers.

☞ The efficacy of Beran's Pulmonic wafers in curing Coughs, Colds, and all Bronchial affections, and cheering the afflicted has passed into a proverb. In the United States where these marvellous Wafers are known, they bear down all opposition and eclipse all rivalry; the demand now for them has steadily increased for the last twenty years, until now the sales average over one hundred thousand boxes a year. Eminent members of the medical profession admit that they know of no preparation producing such benefical results as these wafers.—When taken in season they effect a permanent cure. Sold by all druggists and country dealers at 25 cents per box.

Five Minutes for Refreshments.—Everybody who has travelled by railroad has heard the above announcement, and has probably suffered from eating too hastily, thereby sowing the seeds of Dyspepsia. It is a comfort to know that the Peruvian Syrup will cure the worst cases of Dyspepsia, as thousands are ready to testify.

WORTHY OF NOTE.—An ordinance more than scarcely a day passes that we do not hear, either from personal observation in our office or in some other way, of the success of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment in the cure of coughs and colds, to prevalence about town just now.

If we can benefit the readers of the Examiner and by recommending Parson's Purgative Pills to be the best anti bilious medicine in the country, we are willing to do so. We have had about as good a chance to know as any one.

HAPPINESS.—True happiness, in our opinion, consists of the following articles:—A nice little wife sitting on your knee, her trusting smile filling your mind with happy thoughts, a neat little room tidily furnished, and a bottle of "Canadian Pain Destroyer" in the cupboard ready for instant use. Nothing better for sudden colds, sprains, burns, and all kinds of aches and pains. Price 25 cents per bottle. Sold by all medicine dealers.

We would remind our Skating friends that the Masquerade for the Benefit of the Band comes off on Tuesday evening next, 16th inst. The Band deserve a bumper house as a remuneration for their services during the season.

SUDDEN DEATH: On Tuesday, while Major General McDonald, of this Town, was at dinner, and just in the act of partaking thereof, he was suddenly prostrated by apoplexy, and expired. Up to going to dinner he was in his usual good health.

THE WEST RIDING.—We would advise Reformers in the West Riding not to be found napping, as they know not the moment they may be called upon to have a candidate in the field, if they will retain the advantage gained in the last election.

PERSONAL.—Ivan O'Beirne, Esq., has received the appointment of Clerk to the County Court and Common Pleas and Surrogate Court, in the place of Mr. Fortye, deceased. Mr. O'Beirne is a very worthy gentleman; is well qualified for the position, and will discharge the duties of his office in a satisfactory and efficient manners.

It is rumored that Chas. Perry. Esq., will receive the other position left vacant by the death of Mr. Fortye, namely, that of collector of customs, with the hopes of some little additional office. The office is in the gift of the Dominion Government and will be given to an out an out supporter, no doubt, and Mr. Perry may as well have it as another, we suppose. If a persistant support of J. A. McDonald deserves favor, then Mr. Perry should get it. It may, however, be kept form him, in some way, till after the approaching session of the House of Commons, as John A. does not expect Mr. Perry's successor to be so useful at the capital.

THAT PREMIUM.—At a public meeting at Bobcaygeon, a few weeks ago, Mr. A. F. Wood and the Honorable Billa Flint addressed the people on the prospects of the Grand Junction Railway, and distinctly stated the Directors had a resolution on their books offering a premium of 5 per cent to any person instrumental in obtaining any bonus for their road. Mr. Wood denied all knowledge of the resolution when here, and declared he never said any such thing. Yet we can refer to C. Perry, Esq., D. W. Dumble, Esq., Musgrave Boyd, Esq., and several other gentlemen, who were present at the meeting at Bobcaygeon. Mayor Scott also drew our attention to it on the way home, and hinted that it should be made public, as it was a direct offer of a bribe to get up bonuses for their road.

OUR HIGH SCHOOL A COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE:—The Chairman of the Board of School Trustees has received a letter from the Education office stating that His Excellency has been pleased to confer the title and privileges of a Collegiate Institute on the Peterboro High School. A grant of $750 per annum has been made to the Institute from the first of July last. This is in addition to what it is entitled to as a High School, making a total of about $3,250 for the High School for the year from Government. The salaries of the six teachers in the Collegiate Institute amount to $3,640, leaving only a balance of $390 to be provided. The pupils who attend the High School pay 25 cents per month, an attendance of 200 on the Register would therefore raise $600 in ten months, a sum more than sufficient to pay the entire salaries of the teachers in the Institute. We feel certain that few schools in Ontario can boast of such a state of things. To Mr Dixon, the indefatigable Principal, is due the credit of elevating our school to its present status. The Board, too, deserves praise for supporting him as they have done. The people of Peterboro may be proud of their school.

Mr. A. F. Wood's Statement Refuted.

The following short letter will show what confidence can be placed in some men's statements. The evidence in support of the assertion made by Mr. Stratton at the public meeting on Friday evening, comes from his political opponents as well as his friends.

Peterboro, January 8th, 1872.

James Stratton, Esq.,

DEAR SIR,—In reference to your statement at the Public Meeting on Friday evening, in the Music Hall, relating to the resolution in the Books of the Grand Junction Railway Company. We were present at the meeting at Bobcaygeon, and our recollections are that Mr. Wood did say the resolution was on the Books of the Company.

Yours, &c.,
D. W. DUMBLE.
CHARLES PERRY.

More to be Pitied than Laughed at.

Is a saying not unfrequently applied to those whose minds are not as strong the their seal. The last issue of Review has quite a peroration on the sin of mingling politics in municipal matters, and instances Smith and North Monaghan as municipalities in which he succeeded in introducing politics in the late municipal contests. He succeeded, we say advisedly. For the last 10 or 12 months no trifling amount of abuse has been heaped on Mr. Walton, the Reeve of Smith, just because he is too independent to be led by the nose by the would-be-dictator, and because he was feared as a political opponent. Everything that could be done was done to defeat him, and all the conservative votes around the skirts of the town and Blythe Mills were polled against him; while the only voter known to be a supporter of the Reform party, went to Bridgenorth, acted on the contrary principle, and voted for Mr. Garbutt.

He asserts also that "the special business of the meeting of Mr. Fairbairn's Central Committee, on Saturday night, was to influence the elections on the following Monday. A greater falsehood was never penned. On the contrary, the municipal elections were not spoken of, nor was arrangement made to influence a single voter, nor any attempt to that effect. He who could be guilty of making such an unfounded assertion, as false as unwarrantable, would be ready to, do almost anything. While facts of interest to the people should always be laid before them, we are strongly of the opinion that the citizens of Peterborough have no right to unduly interfere in municipal matters, and the Examiner carried this out to the letter, in going to the Court House for minutes of accounts tending to clear Mr. H. Collins of certain charges laid against him, and that in the face of the fact that Mr. Collins, on political grounds and no other, we believe, voted against us in the County Council last June.

There are many men in all the Councils that "for the public weal" would be better at home. The people who elected them do not think so always. This is, perhaps, to be regretted, but it is true nevertheless.

The Review carries politics into everything it touches, County, Town and Township affairs. You may look over its columns for years in vain for a word written in favor of any one differing from him in politics, and yet with pious indignation he would cant about introducing politics. Surely he is more to be pitied than to be laughed at.

The "Review" in League with the "Midland." Lindsay and the Grand Junction to Ruin Peterborough.

A Branch to be Built from Omemee to Bobcaygeon—by Hook or by Crook.

Lindsay is to Give $50.000 to the Grand Junction Company if they will Undertake and perform the Work.

On Friday night, the very night of the meeting here, the Grand Junction Directors held a meeting in Lindsay, and BOUND THEMSELVES IN A WRITTEN AGREEMENT TO BUILD THEIR ROAD FROM PETERBORO TO LINDSAY—THREE MILES NORTH OF OMEMEE—WITH A BRANCH TO BOBCAYGEON, WHICH BRANCH SHALL NOT BE ON THE EAST SIDE OF PIGEON CREEK. Mr. John McLennan, Deputy Reeve, we believe, of Lindsay, stated this distinctly to a gentleman in Peterboro. Some of our citizens have joined hands with Lindsay and the Grand Junction Company to ruin Peterboro, at any cost. Why, with all their protestations of keeping nothing back, did they not tell us of this agreement with Lindsay! Why did they not say that they HAD AGREED TO BUILD the Branch from Omemee to Bobcaygeon! The Mover of the resolution is surely not in League with them to the injury of Peterborough!

Are the people of Peterborough going to build up Lindsay and Belleville by their selfishness and indifference! If they allow themselves to be cajoled by the offer of bribes, then they deserve to sink into forgetfulness, and their town again to become the haunt of the red man, and wild beasts.

The road to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls, with a branch to Haliburton as soon as possible, is an absolute necessity for Peterboro. Let the friends of progress be united and they will secure all they ask, ere long

The Great Railway Meeting on Friday, a Failure.

Mr. Carnegie's resolution to grant $60,000 to the Grand Junction Railway, and a further $40,000 in connection with that Road, to the Branch to Mud Lake—voted down.

Mr. Stratton's amendment to spend any Bonus in Extension to Georgian Bay by way of Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls, Carried by over 5 to 1.

Mr. Robert Romaine, Proprietor of the Review not among the Prophets. Few will imagine that he felt at home among those who were Hissing to disturb Speakers, and annoy the Meeting.

On Friday evening, a Deputation from Belleville, consisting of Messrs. Kelso Bowell, A. F. Wood, Flint, (not the Hon. Billa), and the Hon. Mr. Read, visited Peterboro for the purpose of placing their Railway Scheme before the Ratepayers.—They were shamed into this course, no doubt, by the articles lately in the Examiner. It was just and right that they should be heard, and that the people should thus have a chance of judging between the rival schemes. It has been often asked why did they not come before this? and the only answer that can be given is—that they must have thought Peterborough secure. They filed appearance at last, and left next morning astonished that Peterboro people can see after their own interests.

Mr. Kelso, President of the Railway Committee, laid the scheme before the meeting, stating, that if Peterborough encouraged them they would build the road and extend it to Lindsay—the branch not spoken of any further than the Lake, and no mention of from what point.

Mr A. F. Wood, Warden of the County of Hastings, followed Mr. Kelso in his usual bland style, vehemently asserting their honesty and integrity, especially his own; held up his hands in holy horror at the idea of holding back anything. They were the real Simon-pure—nothing but plain straightforwardness. They merely came to lay their scheme before Peterboro, and allow the Citizens to form their own judgement.

Mr. Dumble that old caller, came forward, and in a very pointed and forcible way disposed of the whole scheme—stating that it was without any money basis, that it was 17 years hatching, and note yet out of the shell. It was founded on deceitfulness as the Deputation at Bobcaygeon told the people—that they had amalgamated with the Midland Company to run over their road from Omemee to Georgian Bay, with a branch from Omemee to Bobcaygeon.

Here Mr. Wood protested that he had never said so at Bobcaygeon, nor had they any such thing in view.

Mr. Dumble referred to Mr. Wood's own words, also to those of Mr. Hugel who also corroborated the statement of an amalgamation, Several Gentlemen in the Hall also corroborated the statement.

Mr Cluxton then moved, seconded by Mr. Carnegie,—That the Town should grant $60,000 to the Grand Junction on the completion thereof to Georgian Bay, by way of Lindsay, and a further $40,000 to that Company to build a branch to Mud Lake.

Mr. Cluxton spoke in favour of his proposition.

Mr. Bowell, followed Mr. Cluxton in an abusive tirade against Mr. Dumble and Mr. Stratton for the course they were taking. He occupied nearly an hour in windy Billingsgate, without a single argument or fact. Those two Gentlemen seemed particularly obnoxious to him and the Belleville Gentlemen. He referred to charges laid against them of offering bribes to members of the County Council, and denied that ever any premium of five per cent had been offered by their Company to any one.

Mr. Stratton here produced a letter showing that there was not a word of truth in what Mr. Bowell said. He, however, continued vilifying Mr. Stratton, as the great obstacle in the way of their corruption. At length exhausted by the outpourings of his calumny, he sat down.

Mr. Stratton then moved in amendment, seconded by E. Barnham, Esq.,—That, in the opinion of the meeting any bonus granted by the Town should be spent in obtaining Railway Extension to Georgian Bay by way of Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls.

In moving the resolution he showed that at several public meetings the people had again and again agreed that all moneys given by the Town should be spent North of Peterboro, and towards Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls. That by opening roads northward trade would be brought to town, while roads eastward, westward or southward would not increase the trade. He also went on to show that the Grand Junction R. R. had been introduced into the County by offers of bribes to members of the County Council, and by getting a By-law legalized that the people did not want, and as they had done they would continue to do.

Mr. Bowell denied that any bribes had been offered, when Mr. Stratton gave the name of the late Reeve of Galway, Mr. John Hunter, as one whom they attempted to bribe. He also produced the following in proof of his statement that bribes of five per cent were offered :—

Belleville, 15th Sept., 1871.

JOHN FOSTER, ESQUIRE, COBOURG.

SIR,—I was unavoidably absent yesterday afternoon from the conference between yourself and the President and some of the members of the Provisional Board at the "Dafoe House," and referring to the subject matter of that interview at the request of the President, I beg formally in pursuance of the understanding there arrived at, to offer you FIVE PER CENTUM upon all bonuses granted through your services in aid of the Grand Junction Railway Company—said payment to be made so soon as the debentures representing said bonus shall have been approved of and become assets of the Company.

You will duly signify your acceptance of this offer and your intention to proceed at once with the bonus.

I have the honor to be
Your obd't. servt.,
D. B. ROBERTSON,
Secretary of the Provisional
Board G. J. R. Co.

He also referred Mr. Wood, to his (Mr. Wood's) speech at Bobcaygeon, when he told the meeting that the Company had a resolution on their books offering five per cent of a premium to those getting bonuses for their road.

Mr. Wood, with the most unblushing effrontery, denied his own words, although heard by Mr. Stratton, Mr. R. Walton, C. Perry, Esq., and Mayor Scott.

The Deputation were now getting it so hard that their friends tried to prevent the expose by an attempt not to let Mr. Stratton speak, and a few brought there for the purpose did attempt it, but it was all in vain, all the Billingsgate of Mr. Bowell, notwithstanding, who tried to fasten falsehoods on his opponents. Poor creature, his schooling has been in an atmosphere different from ours.

Mr. Burnham seconded the amendment in a clever speech, warning the people of the consequence of building a road direct to Lindsay, and urging them to support the scheme northwards by way of Bobcaygeon. The amendment and motion were then put, when the amendment was carried 5 to 1.

The Deputation and Mr. Carnegie then got into a little knot and crawled out of the Hall.

The Honorable Mr. Read showed his good sense by remaining silent. If the Mayor elect of Belleville had shown as much sense, he might have passed for a Solon away from home. His youth, and the company he keeps, may, however, be sufficient excuse for his vanity and folly in walking in the footsteps of Mr. Bowell, who has been in a bad school at Ottawa.

Will the Goverment Give $420.000 to the Grand Junction Railway.

Mr. Bowell said on Friday evening that the present Government would give $420,000 to their railroad to Georgian Bay.

This was, no doubt, like several more of his random sayings. The present, nor any other government, could not do such a thing The Midland Company has spent a large sum of private capital in building their road. Their all, perhaps, is in it: would any government under the sun give public money to build a rival road parallel to it—and within three or four miles of it—not one. The thing is too absurd to be entertained a moment. The tract of country too, between Belleville and Peterboro, is one of the finest in Ontario. The people are able to spend money for their own accommodation and the Government will say to them—build your railways to the confines of the wild lands and then we will aid you to pass through those districts that require railway communication to lay them open to settlement.

Mr. Bowell is glib of tongue and can say he has promises. We venture to assert that no such promise was ever made to the Grand Junction people—nor will be, for the reasons above given. It would be wrong and unjust in any government to build a rival road parallel to the Midland or any other road. It is far different in respect to roads running into the newly settled districts These the Government will aid as far as they can.

At the close of the meeting on Friday evening, Alex. Smith, Esq., told Mr. Bowell that a Belleville man had tried to get him to offer a bribe to the Reeve of Galway for them, but to no effect. Mr. Bowell then backed down. It could not then be denied with all his effrontery.

The letter of D. R. Robertson, Secretary of the Provisional Directors of the Grand Junction Railway Company, forever sets at rest—the fact that a bribe of five per cent is held out to gentlemen to obtain bonuses for the road. Can this be the cause of the zeal of certain gentlemen to obtain $100,000 for them. That would secure $5000 for their services, ample to pay for a little pen and ink. We can not weigh motives, nor do we desire to do so, but this letter reveals strange management of the affairs of the Company, and who can tell to whom they may have made similar offers?

Aiding Manufactures.

This subject, like granting aid to Railway extension, is now being discussed by our citizens, and many of them are of opinion that the town should grant $40,000 for the purpose.

It is evident that the extension of manufactures, and the introduction of new branches of industry, where a large number of hands would be employed, would materially tend to the increase and prosperity of the town. The present agitation, although it may not secure the desired object, will tend towards it. The promoters of the scheme have we feel satisfied, the interest of the town in view, and are in earnest as to the means to bring that about, and it deserves the serious consideration of the whole citizens.

The schemes proposed are: for the town to grant, say $10,000 more or less; to any company that will agree to carry on any branch of trade not already introduced, and at the same time employ 100 to 200 hands; or otherwise, to get up a joint stock company with $100,000 or $150,000 capital, and offer this sum in proportionate shares, according to the amount of capital proposed to be invested in any one enterprize.

This latter would be more in accordance with our views, as it would enlist the surplus capital of those able to give, and also their interests in the different enterprizes, and would virtually secure the object desired.

Messrs. Paton, Moir & Co., propose to enlarge their present mills at Auburn to three times their present capacity, and to employ at least 200 hands, if the town will grant them aid to the amount of $10,000, in the way of bonus; and several of the citizens are inclined to accede to their terms. It would certainly be a nice thing to have an enterprize in town employing 200 hands. The wages paid yearly would not be less than $60,000. That sum too would be laid out in town, and the merchants would reap the advantages. We cannot see our way to fully adopt this proposal. But all money propositions have to come before the ratepayers for their approval. There is abundant time for consideration, which we hope to be able to give it. In the meantime, we lay before our readers the report of the committee appointed to consider the matter, and ask them to consider it also.

The following is the report, as read by Mr. Bertram, and passed in paragraphs, at a public meeting, held in the Council Chamber, on Tuesday evening last:

The Committee appointed by a public meeting held on the 5th December, '71, for the purpose of taking into consideration the best means of promoting the manufacturing interests of Peterborough, beg to recommend as follows:—

1st. That in order to encourage new branches of industry in this locality, or enable Manufacturers already established to increase their works, the Legislature of Ontario be applied to for the necessary authority to enable this Municipality to aid Manufactures by way of bonus or otherwise, to an extent not exceeding forty thousand dollars. The said sum or any part thereof only to be appropriated upon the By-laws granting the same receiving the approval of the ratepayers, and specifically setting forth for what enterprise such grant is made.

2nd. That no bonus be given to any Manufacturer doing a local business.

3rd. That Messrs. Paton Moir & Co. having made an offer to this committee to enlarge their Woollen Mill to what is known as a Ten Set Mill requiring a capital of $250,000, and guaranteeing the employment of a minimum of Two Hundred operatives, and paying out of Sixty Thousand Dollars per annum in wages. Provided this Municipality grant them a bonus of Ten Thousand Dollars, and exempt their new Factory from taxation for twenty-one years. The committee would recommend the acceptance of this offer, and that the sum of Five Thousand Dollars be paid to the Proprietors of the Auburn Mills when the proposed addition is erected, and Five Hundred Dollars per annum until interest, for ten years. On condition that proper security is furnished to this Municipality, that the proposed factory will continue in full operation for the period of ten years.

And also that the limits of the town of Peterborough be extended so as to include Mr. Geo. Hilliard' Mills, and the property of Messrs. Paton, Moir & Co

Town Council.

The Council met.

Present His Worship the Mayor, and Messrs. Toole, Edmison, Stevenson, Doherty, Lundy, English, Smith, O'Beirne.

The minutes of the last meeting were read over and confirmed.

Communications were read from Hon. P. Gow, Provincial Secretary to the Clerk, and copies of papers in reference to the appointment of Mr. Hatton as Police Magistrate.

From T. M. Fairbairn, Esq.,—acknowledging the receipt of the letter from the Clerk, and that the request of the Council shall receive his best attentions.

Both communications were received.

Petitions were read from Wm. Thompson,—asking the Council to assist a widow and three children, lately from South Monaghan. Referred to the Charity Committee.

From George Tanner—asking remission of taxes. And from Trustees of the Roman Catholic School, complaining that for several years they have not received the amount they were entitled to, on account of interest and sinking fund for School Debentures, and asking for the sum of one and hundred ninety three dollars. Referred to a committee.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Doherty, that the petition of the Roman Catholic School Trustees be referred to a special committee, viz. Messrs. Smith, Lundy, Toole, Doherty, and the mover—Carried.

Mr. O'Beirne, as Chairman, read and submitted the following report which was received and adopted.

The Finance Committee recommend a grant of $200 to the Protestant Home.

In reference to the matter referring to the claim made by Mr. W. A. Kinzie for damages done to a horse, from a defective bridge in the town—amount $40.

Your Committee are of opinion that the Corporation is not liable for the damages claimed, they would, however, recommend payment of twelve dollars, to cover any loss which may have been sustained.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) IVAN O'BEIRNE.

The Street and Bridge Committee reported by Mr. Toole—Mr. Stevenson objected to the report, stating that Mrs Dixon had spent a considerable sum in preventing the water running into the cellars of her stores on George and Simcoe Street.

The report was carried, Mr. Stevenson voting against it.

Moved by Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Smith:—That the Clerk be instructed to forward to Mr. Fairbairn all resolutions passed by this Council in any way relating to the appointment of Mr. D. G. Hatton as Police Magistrate for the Town of Peterboro.

Carried on the following divisions.

YEAS:—Messrs. Toole, Edmison, Doherty, Lundy, Smith, O Beirne.

NAYS:—Stevenson and English.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Toole,—That this Council cannot allow to W. H. Scott, Esq., to retire from the office of Mayor, which he has filled with so much satisfaction to this Council, and usefulness to the public, without recording their approval of his course. Resolved, therefore, that this Council hereby desire to tender its sincere thanks to His Worship the Mayor for his gentlemanly, able and impartial conduct during the many years he has occupied the Chair of this Council as Mayor.

On motion of Mr. Stevenson abatement of taxes to the amount of $34.61 to persons unable to pay them were made.

The Council then adjourned.

We clip the following from the "Dundas True Banner" of November 30th 1871:

"The earliest time, Dundas is perhaps, more highly favoured with regard to Time than any other town in the county. At least eight or ten different establishments have either bells or steam whistles, and it is high twelve" for about an hour and a half every day. The town bell is rung just when Mr. Johnston happens to get hold of the rope—the Drill Shed bell finishes loudly when it suits those who have it in charge—the foundry bell clangs just when it suits all hands—the School bell clangs nearly all the noon hour—McKechnie & Bertram's whistle shrieks whenever the valve is twisted—Forsyth's just to be contrary, is about half an hour after—the Oil Refinery one when the spirit moves the engineer, and so on. The fact is a man can get to his dinner almost any time between eleven o'clock and be on time with some one of the bells or whistles. Why can't we have uniform time kept—Railway time for instance which can be had at the Post Office at all hours? It is time that this contention amongst the bells and whistles was stopped and we nominate Mr. Johnson, the man who winds the town clock and who regulates generally the destinies of this burgh, as a committee of one to effect the much desired reform."

As regards the above can we not well say "ditto" for Peterboro, except perhaps in regard to the town bell. The fast is no fixed time in town. Different establishments having different time. This should not be so, a very trifling cost would secure correct time, and then let it be kept by all.

The Committee of the Protestant Home acknowledge with thanks the following donations for December.

Mrs. Alex. Smith, a parcel of clothing, and some pork; Mr. W. White, a qr. and breast of lamb; Mr. James Read, a lamb; Mr. Tighe, a bag of apples; Miss. Harvey, meal and scarfs for the children; a friend, some pork; Mr. David Hamilton, a qr. of beef; per Miss. Roger, cakes and butter from the S. S. Festival in the Canada Presbyterian Church; a friend, dripping and soap; Mrs. G. E Shaw, beefsteak pie; Miss. Nicholls, a turkey; Mrs. Nicholls, groceries; Mrs Hamilton, fruit cake and basket of apples; Mrs. White, a qtr. of lamb; Mrs. Heyland, a goose and basket of apples; Mrs W. H. Scott, an iced cake; a friend candles; Mrs. Rowand, a qtr. of venison, cakes from a S. S Tea in Ashburnham; Mrs. Hamilton, plumpudding and New Years gifts for each inmate. The usual Christmas donations from the Committee, also $30 received on the 6th Dec'r. last from St. Andrew's Society; and $2 on the 10th inst., from "one who overslept 3rd January, 1872."

To the Editor of the Examiner:

SIR.—I attended your railway meeting on Friday night last and I assure you I was somewhat staggered at some of the statements I heard there Why, sir I happened to be in Bobcaygeon at a railway meeting there when I heard Mr. Wood, Warden of the County of Hastings, state that the Grand Junction Company had made an arrangement with the Midland Railway Company to run over the Midland track from Omemee to Georgian Bay—and when asked by Mr Jonkins, Dep. Reeve of Verulam, how they intended to get to Bocaygeon, he, Mr. Wood, said that they would build a branch from Omemee to Bobcaygeon. I also heard Mr. Wood state that a Resolution was on the books of the Company offering a bonus of five per cent to any one who would get up bonuses for them; his words I afterwards saw reported in the Port Hope Times. The Mayor of your town, Mr. Robt. Walton, Mr. M. Boyd and many others heard these statements. Judge then my surprise at the flat denial given by Mr. Wood to these charges. I was also surprised on the following day when at Lindsay I heard that on the same evening of your meeting, Lindsay had offered $50,000 to the Grand Junction, provided a branch to Bobcaygeon should not be built east of Pigeon Creek—and the condition was agreed to.

Surely that clause in the resolution of Mr Cluxton about a branch to Mud Lake was buncombe to catch Peterboro, when those same Junction people on the same night agreed to build the Bobcaygeon branch west of Pigeon Creek. They wanted your $60,000 and never intended to build the branch to Mud Lake from Peterboro. Surely, Sir, these Junction people have not got all that honesty which they say John Fowler has lost. I think if Peterboro people saw the fears of Lindsay about loosing the northern trade, they would soon make up their mind how to act.

Yours truly,
TRAVELLER.

Re-union in North Monaghan.

(Communicated for the Examiner.)

The Michaelmas term in S. S. No. 3 North Monaghan, was brought to a close by a Re-union. The programme consisted of two parts, the first of which was composed of dialogues, recitations and music by the pupils of the School; the second part consisted of addresses from several gentlemen present, as well as music by the ladies.

Mr. Johnston, Teacher, being called to the chair, opened the exercise by a few appropriate and well-timed remarks, when the part of the programme particularly allotted to the pupils was proceeded with.

As this is the second of the kind that has been in connection with the school, we are therefore the better able to speak of its commendable merit. It must have been gratifying to the teacher, Mr. Jas. Campbell, to witness how well his energy and labor for the advancement of his pupils were appreciated on this occasion, as even those who did not audibly express themselves gave ample testimony of their entire satisfaction. The part of the entertainment properly belonging to the pupils was such as to reflect great credit on those who took part in it, and altogether in advance of a similar one given last year. Where all did so well we decline to make and invidious distinctions. Dialogues were admirably given by Master W. Leary, F. Birney, C. Birney, and the Misses Bella Birney and Maggie Berry. Recitations were given by Master C. Leary, W. Livsey, A. Berry, John Berry, G. Bennett, R. Leary, J. Somerville, and by the Misses M. Stewart, M. Birney, E. Somerville, S. Bennett.

We would be doing an injustice to the ladies of the section not to mention that at this point of the proceedings all retired to the Town Hall adjoining, and partook of an excellent tea, a not at all uncommon thing in this Section. Tea being served all returned to the room, when the second part of the programme was proceeded with. The chairman then called upon the Rev. Mr. Maclennan, of Peterborough, who gave a very interesting and amusing address, which gave evidence that he was no stranger to education and the workings of public schools. Pithy and appropriate remarks were also made by AMERICA AND SPAIN.—A Washington special says.—Within the past two days, questions have arisen between Secretary Fish and Minister Roberts, which have led to some very sharp words, and are not unlikely to result in the speedy departure of the Spanish Minister. It has leaked out that these questions have arisen out of the interviews between the American and Spanish officers in Cuba, and which have been brought to the attention of the State Department within the past two or three days. It is reported that the Secretary of War has ordered regranting officer Davis to continue recruiting in the city, and to retain all reputable-looking men who are desirous of sending them west. Cox, to-day offered a resolution in the House to recognize the Cubans as belligerents. The War Department has given orders to put the fortifications of the southern seaports in the best possible condition for defence. It is reported that this is done in the view that war with Spain is possible.

PAIN KILLER

Husband (Returned from a call on Judge Jones). Well Mary, I have examined those certificates and found them straight as a string, there are so many imitations and counterfeits sticking like barnacles to every good medicine that I have learned to look upon the good and bad as one alike. It is very wrong however, this PAIN-KILLER of Perry Davis has stood the test of time. Doctors and Druggists have not been able to hush it up, it's no use you say. Mary in everybody's home and I am astonished to find it has been doing such a world of good about here and we have known nothing about it.

Wife:—It must have cured somebody's rheumatism or you wouldn't have been converted so easily.

Husband:—Converted, why it has cured a dozen of cases about here whithin a year. Simon Tinkler who you know used to be such an awful sufferer with it and was laid up half the time, why it was this same Perry Davis' PAIN-KILLER that cured him. Geo Trotter who Doctor Squills used to pity so much and call such a great sufferer, he too was cured with the PAIN-KILLER and what more he writes that he paid Doctor Squills over one hundred Dollars for attending him and was growing worse all the while, here my dear rub some of it on my shoulder at once I am through with Squills, if Pain-Killer can't cure me nothing will I am convinced of that.

Sold every where, price 25 cts. and 50 cts. per bottle.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL
Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECL CTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six or some of the best Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and positive effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, into which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alchol is lost in that way, and you get only the smell of Oils which they may contain.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the glossy and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla
FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys is derived from its cures many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were only greatly, by the scrofulous contamination of they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this ancient and inveterate foe of the human constitution and to it the effects of nearly all diseases are attributable. Although it does not breed in the blood, it corrupts it, and thus, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops one or more of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. From the universal use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla it will vitalize, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, in such cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Pile, Epilepsy, Neuralgia and the various diseases and affections of the kidneys and liver.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for eliminating these obstinate maladies from the system. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Tumors, Boils, Blotches, Pustules, Ulcerations, and Female Diseases are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its searching and invigorating effects. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Inflammations and Grief, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matter in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Jaundice or Inflammation of the Liver, and Dysentery, when arising as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Prostrate, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the distressing symptoms of Weakness, will find incredible relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

FURS---ATTENTION.

The subscriber begs to announce to wholesale buyers, and to the public in general that he has compared his own manufacture in furs against the manufacture of Montreal and Toronto houses; and he can with confidence, challenge them as to the superiority of his furs, in finish as well as in price.
Montreal and Toronto shows a good sample of dark Mink goods, of which most of them are colored.
He begs to caution the public not to take some white hairs in Mink as a sale guarantee that they are not colored, as the white hairs in Mink cannot be colored.
The desire of the public for dark Mink has, no doubt, made it necessary for wholesale as well as retail houses to adopt the method of coloring.
I solicit the patronage of my old customers, as well as strangers, to the inspection of my furs, which are not represented under fictitious names.

The New Year.

We are standing on the threshold; we are in the open door—
We are treading on a border land we have never trod before—
Another year is opening, and another year is gone,
We have passed the darkness of the night; we are in the early morn—
We have left the fields behind us o'er which we scattered seed
We pass into the future which none of us can read.
The corn among the weeds, the stones, the surface mould,
May yield a partial harvest; we hope for sixty fold,
From out the tender hearts of children we have taught,
From all the grateful homes where temperance has wrought.
Then hasten to fresh labor, to thresh and reap and sow,
Then bid the new year welcome, and let the old year go—
Then gather all your vigor, press forward in the fight,
And let this be your motto, "For God and for the Right."

The Organ-Blower.

Devoutest of my Sunday friends,
The patient organ-blower bends;
I see his figure sink and rise.
(Forgive me, Heaven, my wandering eyes!)
A moment lost, the next half seen,
His head above the scanty screen,
Still measuring out his deep salaams
Through quavering hymns and panting psalms.

No priest that prays in gilded stole,
To save a rich man's mortgaged soul;
No sister fresh from holy vows,
So humbly stoops, so meekly bows;
His large obeisance puts to shame
The proudest genuflecting dame,
Whose Easter bonnet low descends,
With all the grace devotion lends.

O brother with the supple spine,
How much we owe those bows of thine!
Without thine arm to lend the breeze,
How vain the fingers on the keys!
Though all unmatched the players skill,
Those thousand throats were dumb and still;
Another's art may shape the tone
The breath that fills it is thine own.

Laws of Falling Bodies.

Before the time of Galileo, it was supposed that the velocity with which bodies fell depended on their size and nature, so that large masses would fall faster than small ones; so-called heavy bodies, as metals, etc., faster than stones; these faster than wood, and so on, till light bodies, such as feathers, etc., could only fall slowly, being less acted on by gravitation.

Galileo was, toward the end of the sixteenth century, the first to announce to the world his demonstration that the velocity of the fall must be totally independent of the size of a body. He argued thus: If a ball of one pound falls with a certain velocity, and a second similar ball also, the two balls will, of course, when dropped together, fall with the same velocity, and there is no reason that this velocity of the fall would change when we stick them together, and what is true for two balls must be true for twenty or a thousand; consequently the velocity of the fall of the largest mass must be equal to the velocity of each of its particles, and it is totally indifferent if there are many or few. He demonstrated this also by experiment, in dropping a piece of lead of half pound and another of fifty pounds from a high building, showing practically that his abstract reasoning was correct.

The difference in the velocity of the fall of so-called light and heavy bodies was ascribed by Galileo to the greater or less resistance of the air; but it was reserved for Isaac Newton to demonstrate this practically a century later, by his well known experiment with the gold coin and the feather, which when inclosed in a glass tube some ten feet long, will be seen to fall with perfectly equal rapidity, when the tube is rapidly inverted, after the air in the same has previously been exhausted as much as possible by means of the air-pump. On admitting the air again, by opening the stop-cock, the gold piece will descend rapidly, while the feather will be much retarded, just as it is the case when these bodies fall under ordinary circumstances; thus proving practically that the sole cause of retardation in the velocity of the fall of so-called light bodies is the resistance of the air. Every one knows that a bag of feathers or a feather bed, when thrown from a window, will fall quite rapidly to the ground, while, when its contents are emptied out, the separate feathers present so much surface to the resistance of the air, that on a windy day they would not reach the ground before being carried quite a distance away by the air-currents.

The next question to investigate was this: If all bodies fall with the same velocity, when the resisting influence of the air is excluded, what is this velocity? It has been found by elaborate experiments made in different ways, and also by calculations deduced from the relation of the length of a pendulum to the time in which it makes its oscillation, that every body of whatever nature, large or small, will, at the level of the ocean in our latitude, in a vacuum, descend 16 feet and 1 inch in the first second of its fall.

We say the first second, and not per second, because (as no doubt every observing person has noticed) the velocity of a falling body increases continually, and when falling from a great hight, comes down with an enormous velocity. Let us now investigate what the ratio of this increase must be.

Gravitation, acting equally on all bodies, as well on those in motion as on those at rest, causes necessarily this acceleration, because to the motion acquired more motion is continually added; and as gravitation acts uniform, the acceleration, thus produced must be uniform also. As now a falling body starts with no motion at all, and has a mean velocity of 16 1-12 feet per second, the velocity acquired at the end of the first second must be 2×16 1-12 or $32\frac{1}{6}$ feet, because 16 1-12 is the mean between 0 and $32\frac{1}{6}$. This number varies slightly in different latitudes, being greater near the pole (nearly $32\frac{1}{4}$ feet) and smaller near the equator (nearly 32 1-10;) it is also smaller when experimenting in localities high above the ocean level, or in doing this at some depth below the surface of the earth; but whatever the exact number may be, it has been agreed to call it g, the first letter of the word gravitation.

After a body, then, has been falling one second, it has acquired the final velocity, $g=32\frac{1}{6}$ feet, which means that if the attraction of gravitation were suddenly withdrawn, it would for all further time proceed at a uniform motion of $32\frac{1}{6}$ feet per second; but during the second second, gravitation adds again 16 1-12 feet, which makes $32\frac{1}{6}\times16$ 1-12, which according to the accepted way of writing, is $1\frac{1}{6}g$. As this second second is commenced with the velocity g, ($48\frac{1}{6}$,) it must end with the velocity $2g$, ($64\frac{1}{3}$,) because $1\frac{1}{6}g$ is the mean between g and $2g$. Continuing this reasoning for third, forth, fifth, and following seconds, we find that the distance passed over in them must be respectively $2\frac{1}{6}g$, $3\frac{1}{6}g$, $4\frac{1}{6}g$, etc., while the respective, final velocities acquired at the end of each second must be $3g$, $4g$, $5g$, etc.

We are able to construct a table of these details, but instead of 16 1-12, we will use 16, each of which can be used in the table

TABLE OF THE RELATION OF TIME TO DISTANCES AND VELOCITIES OF FALLING BODIES.

Time in seconds.	Space passed over for each second.	Velocity acquired at end of each second.
1st.....	16 or $(1g)$	32 or $2g$
2nd.....	3×16 " $3\times(1g)$	2×32 " $2g$
3rd.....	5×16 " $5\times(1g)$	3×32 " $3g$
4th.....	7×16 " $7\times(1g)$	4×32 " $4g$
5th.....	9×16 " $9\times(1g)$	5×32 " $5g$
6th.....	11×16 " $11\times(1g)$	6×32 " $6g$
nth.....	$(2n-1)\times16$ " $(2n-1)\times(1g)$	$n\times32$ " ng

We call especial attention to the last line, in which the second under consideration has been called n, and which reveals the law by which the space passed over by a falling body in any given second, or the final velocity at the end of each second, may be found. It is at the same time an exercise to those of our readers not familiar with algebraic expressions, to become acquainted with this in our day, so indespensible a means of assisting our reasoning concerning quantities.—Nothing is easier than to transform these last expressions into a rule.

First rule.—To find the space passed over by a falling body in a given second of its fall, take twice the number of that second, subtract one, and multiply 16 feet by the remainder.

Second rule.—To find the final velocity acquired by a body after falling any number of seconds, multiply 32 feet by this number.

It is seen that, for simplicity's sake, we neglect in this rule the 1-12 or $\frac{1}{6}$ of a foot, and substitute the whole numbers, 16 and 32. This was chiefly for the reason that the experiments for great distances are never taken in a vacuum, and that under ordinary circumstances the resistance of the air causes the distance fallen through and the velocities acquired to be in any case less than the numbers given; so that, by neglecting these fractions, we come even nearer to the truth than by taking them into account.

Material for Paper Making.

Most of our readers are aware that the common yellow paper used by grocers for a wrapping-paper is made from straw, and that also certain qualities of light and heavy pasteboard are manufactured of the same material. It is not, however, adapted for the finer kinds of paper, the fibres being too coarse and it produces a paper which is neither beautiful nor strong. In order to obtain these qualities, linen and cotton rags have been used from time immemorial; but if we consider that the flax or cotton fibre from which the linen or cotton fabrics are made is much stronger than it is in the old used-up rags, it is evident that we should obtain a much stronger paper if, in place of the rags, we used the vegetable fibre fresh from the plant. This has been done to a certain extent in the process of paper made from wood, but as the fibre of wood is short, it is usually mixed with longer fibre, and the paper made in this way is not strong. Many newspapers are at present printed on such wood-paper. A better paper is produced by taking the bark of many plants, as the malva, or jute, hemp etc to which we may add the animal fibres, as wool, silk, fish-fibre, as of course the fibre is stronger when it has not gone through the wear and tear of the material, which at last becomes a rag.

It is curious that the Japanese and Chinese have, for more than one thousand years, followed the very method now only proposed and partially introduced with us. Recent investigations have proved that the Coreans, that supposes barbarous people with whom we lately attempted to provoke a bloody war, made a beautiful paper from bark fibre in the beginning of our era, and imported it, about the year 250, into Japan. That about the year 600, the Japanese commenced to make paper, and used for it the cuttings of the paper mulberry-tree, which they introduced from Corea. In their process they use steam to loosen the fibre of the bark, which is the only part of the tree they use for paper. They mix the pulp with the pasty fibre of the root of another plant, the tororo, not unlike cotton; their treatment of the pulp, in order to make paper, is very similar to the old way followed in Europe before the invention of the machinery now universally in use.

The variety of the fibre used by the Japanese is very great, and long experience has taught them what kind to use as best adapted for special purposes. The common paper and paper-make is made from the bark of the kajo, a specis of willow, while the best kinds of paper, that used for their paper currency, is made from the bark of the mitsumata. In general, their paper is much more tough than ours, so that it is difficult to tear it; while they look with contempt on many kinds of our paper, which indeed are so rotten that requires great care to turn the leaves of many journals in which woody fibre is used, without great danger of tearing them.

The Manufacture of Bank-Note Paper.

The stock of which bank-note paper is made is not old rags, as used for other paper, as this produces a paper not strong enough to stand the wear and tear to which greenbacks are subject, but the stock is new linen. This is placed in a rotary boiler and boiled for hours with lime. After being sufficiently boiled under a steam pressure of sixty pounds it goes into a washing-engine, in which it is then ground or beaten for about twelve hours. At first the water is let in at the bottom of the engine, and is taken out at the top by a revolving cylinder covered with wire cloth, which process goes on till the dirt and color, as far as it can be done by lime and water, is removed. Bleaching chemicals are then added, the "half stuff," as the substance is then called, is thrown into vats, where it is allowed to drain and bleach. From these vats it goes into the beating-engine, where, by a long process of grinding or beating, it is reduced to a fine pulp or "stuff," as it is technically called. Great care is taken that the fibre of the linen is not cut short during the process of beating the object being to beat it into its finest parts rather than to cut it short, as is done with book and writing-papers. It is this which gives to bank-note paper its peculiar strength and bladdery appearance. At this stage of the process the "distribution fibre" is introduced. Through the whole body of the paper, a long and comparatively coarse red fibre may be discovered. It is a substance like silk, and is cut into lengths of about an inch, and placed in the beating-engines a short time before the beating is completed. When the stuff is fine enough, it is let down by a valve at the bottom of the engine to the stuff chest in the machine-room. The "localized fibre" is prepared in essentially the same way, and is usually of blue color—that is let down to a separate chest, on the machine. The stuff or pulp, containing the distribution fibre, passes on the machine in the usual way; while that containg the localized fibre, by an ingenious contrivance, is made to flow in continuous sheet. These lines are so contrived as to bring the localized fibre into a particular part of the bond or note; and the presence of this fibre in the bond or note is evidence of its genuiness. The paper while on the machine, passes under cylender rolls, and over steam rolls, till it is dry. It is then slit up lengthwise, and passes through an aninal size; after that it is cut up by machinery into sheets, and goes in to the "lay-boy." After the paper has been sized, it goes to the drying loft, where it is hung on pols. From the drying loft it goes to the finishing-room, where it is calendered and counted by the manufacturers, and thence it passes to the upper loft of the mill, where it is trimmed, examined, aid pounted, cased and sealed.

EIGHT TO SIXTEEN.—An English nobleman recently stated in a public meeting in London, that, from personal observation, he has ascertained, that of adult male criminals of that city, nearly all had fallen into a course of crime between the ages of eight and sixteen; and that it a young man lived an honest life up to twenty years, there were forty-nine chances, a nd only one against him, as to an incorrigible life thereafter. This is a fact of singular importance to fathers and mothers, and shows a fearful responsibility. Certainly a parent should secure and exercise absolute control over the child under sixteen. It cannot be a difficult matter to do this, except in very rare cases; and if this control is not very wisely and efficiently exercised, it must be the parent's fault; it is owing to parental remissness. Hence, the real source of ninety-eight per cent, of the crime in a country such as England and the United States, lies at the door of the parents. It is a fearful reflection. We throw it before the minds of the fathers and mothers of our land, and there leave it to be thought in wisdom, remarking only as to the seeds of bodily disease, that are in nearly ever, case sown between sundown and bedtime in absence from the family circle; in the supply of spending-money, never earned by the spender—opening the doors of confectionaries, and fashionable establishments, or beer and tobacco, and wine-shops of the circus, the negro minstrel, the restaurant and dance; then follows the Sunday excursion, the sunday drive, with the easy transition to the company of those whose ways lead to the gates of social physical and moral ruin.

☞ Is health worth having? If is protest it—it is a jewl as easy lost as virtue, and in many cases as difficult to recover. In this climate, and more particularly at this season of the year, weopeare very apt to to take cold and suffer from sear throat, coughs, spitting of blood and pulmonary complaints generally, which if not checked immediately lead to sore consequences. The question arises—which is the quickest and most effectual remedy? Hyram's Calmonic Waters have been before the public for twenty years and have always given perfect satisfaction, and invariably effect permanent cures when taken in season. The Queer Will.

A number of years ago, Dr. William Dunlop of Colborne Township, Ont., departed this life, leaving the following queer production as his last Will and Testament:

"In the name of, God. I, William Dunlop, of Gairbraid, in the Township of Colborne, and District of Huron, Western Canada, Esquire, being in sound health, and my mind just as usual, which my friends who flatter me say, is no great shakes at the best of times, do make my last Will and Testament, as follows: Revoking of course, all former Wills, I leave the property of Gairbraid, and all other landed property I may die possessed of, to my sisters, Ellen Boyle Story, and Elizabeth Boyle Dunlop, the former because she is married to a minister, whom (God help) she henpecks; the latter because she is married to nobody, nor is she likely to be, for she is an old maid and not market-ripe: and also I leave to them and their heirs my share of the stock and implements of the farm; provided always, that the enclosure around my brother's grave be reserved; and if either should die without issue then the other to inherit the whole. I leave to my sister-in-law, Louisa Dunlop, all my share of the house-hold furniture and such traps, with the exceptions, hereinafter mentioned. I leave my silver tankard to the eldest son of old John, as the representative of the father. I would leave it to old John himself, but he would melt it down to make temperance medals, and that would be, sacrilege; however, I leave my big horn snuff box to him; he can only make temperance horn-spoons with that. I leave my sister Jenny my Bible, formerly the property of my great-grandmother, Bertha Hamilton, of Woodhall, and when she knows as much of the spirit as she does of the latter, she will be a better Christian than she is. I also leave my late brother's watch to my brother Sandy, exhorting him at the same time to give up Whiggery, Radicalism, and all other sins that do most easily beset him. I leave my brother Allen my big silver snuff box, as I am informed that he is rather a decent Christian, with a snug belly and a jolly face. I leave Pare a Chevassie (Maggie's husband) the small box I got from the Sarnia militia, as a small token of gratitude for the services he has done the family in taking a sister that no man of taste would have taken.—I leave John Caddel a silver teapot, to the end that he may drink tea therefrom to comfort him under the affliction of a slatternly wife. I leave my books to my brother Andrew, because he has been so long a jangly wallon, that he may learn to read them. I give my silver cup with a sovereign in it, to Janet Graham Dunlop, because she is an old maid and pious, and, therefore, will necessarily take to morning and also my granny's snuff shell, as it looks decent to see an old woman taking snuff.—In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my seal, the 31st day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty two.—W. DUNLOP.

American Absurdities in Dress.

How shocked would these ladies of our "first society" be, if they knew that the torturing and ill-forming shoes on whose stilt-like heels they tilt and suffer, no Paris shop-keeper would offer to a lady. To suffer the excruciating pain of the ingnesion, to be clipped for life for the sake of playing; the French lady would be hard enough; only after such martyrdom, to be like the demi-monde of the boulevards, is too bad. For more than two years American woman, especially young girls, have walked the public streets with conspicuous chains and lockets, or flaunting bows of ribbons attracting the attention of every passing gazer to their bear throats and dresses open to our scandalizing themselves for the exposition be the thoughts that it was "perfectly French." If so, it it was a custom which no French lady should wear on the public promenade.—The dress of the French lady is artistic, simple, faultless—faultless, often because it is simplicity it elf. She may wear brilliant colors in her drawing-room, and in her carriage, never on the street. When she walks she wears black or grey, and it never dragon the ground. When she goes to church she wears the same colors, is always attired in the simplest manner. This is true of Italy. In the Sistine chapel, Rome, no lady can enter unless attired in black, with no covering on her head but vail of the same hue. What a contrast to the church attire of American woman! They are accustomed to think of themselves as perfect saints compared with Italian and French woman, yet they enter their house of God as they would a theatre. They don their gayest plumage, hang on their chains and lockets, take off their kid gloves to show their diamond rings in the sacred temple just as in the academy of music. Worse, they stare and comment on each other's costumes, and absolutely make the place of worship a place in which to study the fashions—this is not French. The same lack of fitness in dress is seen in the utter disregard to age as well as occasions in the deputations of dress. The woman of thirty or forty may be as beautiful as a woman of twenty, by her own right, if there's no incongruity between her years and attire. It is only when the woman of forty dresses like a girl of twenty when she looks absurd. We despise her, not for what she is, but for trying to appear that which so palpably she is not. A French married lady never wears a round hat; an English lady only in traveling; an English matron never at church. Yet everywhere American matrons with faces lined and scarred, may be seen with staring jockeys set on their gray heads like helmets, bell-crowned and bonnets more fantastic than the ones worn by their little daughters of ten; while the little girls of ten may be seen dancing at Delworth's in brocade silks, and point lace collars, old, grand enough, for their grand mothers. Pinned and linen and muslin are worn by the little princes and princesses abroad, but are by no means fine enough for the little prince and princesses American. All of which is not French, though to be "perfectly French" has been the alpha and omega of our aspirations in dress. Plainly we must begin to learn it over again.

At certain seasons of the year most persons are subject to diseases emanating from a low state of the blood. The causes are various; but it is only necessary, in order for the prompt purification of that fluid, that the patient should use Fellows Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites, with full assurance of obtaining the desired results. This syrup will strengthen the organs of digestion, promote healthy assimilation, nourish the muscles, and renovate the nervous system.

A Secret Worth Knowing—Some horse dealers have discovered that by the use of Harley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy their horses are so much improved in every respect that they will readily sell for from $25 to $50 each more than they would otherwise, and at a cost of not more than $1 each. We consider this a secret worth knowing, and one which all who own horses should not fail to profit by; it is unquestionably the best horse medicine ever sold. Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Pastors and Evang'sts.

The Rev. E. P. Hammond sends us the following cutting from an American paper. "It tells it as it truly," he says, "in few words." He adds, "We sometimes talk of returning to England for a year's labour; but there is plenty of work for the Master here."

"The Baptist Union regards it as strange that so many are prejudged against evangelists. Speaking especially for the open-communion men of the denomination, it says:—

"There is no occasion for rivalry between them and pastors. They are mutual helpers, parts of the machinery for saving the lost. If a pastor is jealous, sensitive, and more anxious about his place and reputation than for the salvation of souls, he is pretty sure to suffer from the presence of an evangelist; but if he forgets self, and seeks the salvation of souls only, he is very sure to be strengthened in influence and made dearer to his people by the aid of his brother worker. 'He that saveth his life shall lose it; but he that loseth his life for Christ's sake shall save it.' How many men have ruined themselves by their carelessness, and then charged it to the account of evangelists!

"Every pastor should labour some part of each year as an evangelist. He should go outside of his own congregation, and preach especially to sinners. It will do him good, give him a new class of experiences; he will learn to manage masses of mind, and will gain confidence and courage. The novelty of a new style of preaching attracts the people, awakens interest, stirs the moral elements, and the excitement reacts upon the preacher, and draws out his powers, moves his heart, awakens enthusiasm, and gives him new powers to preach, and courage to work. Every man needs this process to brighten him up. Pastoral work is so much of a routine that the most studious and active become monotonous and dull without knowing it. A protracted meeting or two each year in a strange congregation will furnish and sharpen them.—They will gain thoughts, inspiration, and strength in this way, which will greatly increase their pastoral usefulness. Churches and pastors should arrange for such outside work every year for the good of the pastors, as well as for promoting revivals, and saving souls. Hundreds of pastorates are almost failures from lack of just such discipline as protracted meetings afford."

To be an Editor

Carlton, in his editorial poem tells of an an old farmer who made his way into the sanctum with a runt of a boy, who being good for nothing else, the farmer thought he would do for an editor. The poet tells the story as follows: [We "run it in mind," as being as solid a set of questions as perhaps were ever asked a country youth.]

The editor sat in his sanctum and looked the old man in the eye. The man grinned at the grinning young hopeful, and mournfully made this reply

"Is your son a small unbound edition of Moses and Solomon both? Can he compress his spirt with meekness, and a smile a natural oath? Can he leave all his wrongs to the future, and carry his heart in his cheek? Can he do an hour's work in a minute, and live on a sixpence a week? Can he courteously talk to an equal, and brow-beat an impudent dunce? Can he keep things in apple-pie order, and do babies-and-other things at once? Can he press all the springs of knowledge with quick and reliable touch? And be sure that he knows how much to know, and knows how to not know too much? Does he know how to stir his virtue, and put a check rein on his pride? Can he carry a gentleman's manners into a rumpus? Into? Can he know all, and dare all, and be all, with cheerfulness, courage and vim? Then, we perhaps can make an editor out of him."

The farmer stood curiously listening, while wonder his visage overspread; and he said: "Jim I guess we'll be going; for I probably out of the need."

FRENCH OPINIONS ON PRINCE'S SPEECH CAMPAIN.—England says the Temps "is the only country in Europe where the government is sufficiently firmly established, and where respect for the liberty of discussions has so far been one common that orators may, without making any one uneasy or being themselves disquieted, go from town to town carrying on publicly a campaign against the Government of the country. It is known that a young member of Parliament, Sir Charles Duke, has been making a tour through England, speaking at meetings after meeting Queen Victoria, in the administration of her house-hold and the Civil List, and in short, preaching the Republic. At Leeds as at Chelsea and Bolton, it was the police who protected the Republican orator against the crowd by maintaining some kind of order at these meetings.—Sir Charles Duke is now preparing to renew his campaign in London itself, and this time under the auspices of the International of which he has just been elected a member. Mr. John Hales, the secretary of that society, has officially declared that in the International Citizen Duke was generally admitted to have a claim to be the first President of the Republic.' Some members had thought of Citizen Gladstone but the young hero was preferred to him. A great Democratic meeting is being prepared in London in his honour, and at a preparatory Citizen Duke will be proclaimed President of the English Republic, or at least a candidate for the Presidency under the eyes and protection of the police, and the police will expel them the meeting any opponents who may venture as at Boston, to throw rotten eggs at Queen Victoria's competitor. Such is English liberty."

GLASS MADE DIRECTLY FROM GRANITE.—The Belfast Journal reports that there exists near several extensive Finland a kind of granite, called Capakivi, of which the composition is this: Silica, 71 per cent; feld-par, 12; oxide of iron, 4; lime, 1; alkalies, with traces of magnesia, 9. The being evenly ground compound to make glass, the first experiment was consequently made by melting 300 parts granite and 200 limestone, and a white glass was obtained. The second experiment was made with 500 granite, 150 limey and 75 of soda. The glass was more tunable, and at the same time harder. Both kinds were blown with no difficulty, and a bright red hue, while a dark glass was made by the addition of 70 parts of sulphate of iron to a pound, and 7 parts of carbon. As there is no doubt that our continent there is granite of a similar composition, we throw the communication out as a hint to those interested.

We were pleased to see, not long since, in one of our exchanges, some pretty severe remarks addressed to several ministers who, during a very interesting lecture by Rev. Jas. A. C. Allen, kept a continuous conversation which prevented many from hearing. People who cannot refrain from conversing had better stay away from any meeting, or else take a hint of Johnny's Answer to Lemuel with them.

The importance of giving Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders to horses we have seen it stated in the end can scarcely be too much estimated; no man should be without them who owns a good horse.

CAUTION! In our changeable climate, coughs, colds, and diseases of the throat, lungs and chest will always prevail. Consumption will claim its vict Gallely's Concert, Thursday, 25th of January.

"THE MANUFACTURER AND BUILDER" deserves to be largely patronized.

English, Irish, Scotch, and American songs will be sung at Gallely's Concert, 25th of January.

The Town Council at its last Session introduced another By-law for $80,000, to aid the Haliburton Railway Company.—Some say this By-law will pass, and some say it will not. It does not concern us one cent whether it does or does not, if "Chiselers" don't get a hold of it. Nor would we swear we had a lease "extending for the period of time within which the debt contracted by the By-law now submitted to the Ratepayers, is made payable" if our lease had only six or seven years to run, for all the Railroads in Canada. "Does Lucre then, the sacred thirst of gold betray" the cause of such oaths?

RAILWAYS.—The By-law was defeated last Thursday, because the Councillors are "Chiselers," and the people have no confidence in them. So said a Fly-sheet issued that day. The people of Peterboro must be strange people indeed: Only eleven days before, the Councillors were elected, and a large vote given in at least three of the wards. There was no contest in the Centre Ward. On the eleventh instant they are called a set of "Chiselers," in whom the people can have no confidence. Surely the Electors on Monday, 1st inst., must have been under some unholy influence to elect a set of "Chiselers" to whom neither Bylaws nor agreements can be entrusted.—After all, perhaps, they are not such bad fellows.

BURNS ANNIVERSARY.—As will be seen by our advertising colums, our townsman Mr. Galletly, is to give us one of his popular Concerts on the evening of the 25th inst., (Burns birthday.) We think we but speak the minds of our fellow citizens, when we say that since Mr. G. residence in Town he has won for himself very much respect, by his quiet, unobtrusive and gentlemanly manners, and specially so from the admirers of his really fine vocal musical powers, from the fact that on every occasion wherein Mr. G. services are of use in this direction he is always ready to lend a helping hand, and thus contribute very much to our public entertainments. We therefore trust that in view of these facts, advantage will be taken to testify to Mr. G. our appreciation of such valuable services by giving him a "bumper house".

"The Mouth of the Wicked Poureth Out Evil Things"—Saith the Wise Men.

The virtuous, noble minded, educated, and gentlemanly Editor of the Review, in last week's issue pours forth a volley of abuse against us of the character that might be expected from a creature of his malignity. In answer to which we refer him to the above quotation from the Book of books.—With almost prophetic visions a writer says—

"Of every broken craft a writer's made,
And might it be added to this

"Natures refuse, and the dregs of men Compose the black millids of the pen."

In reading over the venom of the creature who could indite such stuff without foundation, the reader will no doubt say truly; "the blood-thirsty hath the upright."

Our character needs no defence, and the events that have transpired since the meeting fully establish our position and the charges we laid against the Grand Junction clique. The date does not signify a cent, (the true date, however, was given) The letter testifies that bribes were offered, and if to one, to how many more we know not.

The editor of the Review remembers his own oath in the agricultural affair last year, and wishes to blacken his neighbor also, if possible. He misrepresents and falsifies, facts to suit his purposes, but it is of no avail. The hisses of Robert Romaine hurt no one, and the slander of John Carnegie have no effect.

The Grand Junction By-law for $75,000.

It is the intention of the friends of honest and constitutional government to bring in a Bill to repeal the Act legalizing the $75,000 By-law, passed last Session.

Their reasons for doing so, are:

1. That the County Council never passed it.

2. That the Ratepayers of the County of Peterborough never petitioned the Legislature to have it legalized. The petition was put in by the Secretary of the Provisional Directors, Mr. Robertson, who lives in Belleville.

3. It is believed that the interference of outsiders with Local matters is dangerous, and ought not to be tolerated for a moment.

4. It is unconstitutional, and strikes at the root of our Municipal Institutions to allow men from Belleville or any where else except those of our own County to interfere in matters that our own Councillors have rejected.

5. It is also dangerous to thus over ride the vote of the County Council, in favour of one section of the County. For, on the same principle something adverse to the interests of that portion might be secured by outside influence again.

In this case the By-law is in favour of the extreme South of the County, but should another By-law be carried by the same unconstitutional means in favour of the extreme North, what would the South then think of it?

It is wisest and best to allow the people and their Councillors to manage all internal matters; and at any rate some of them should have petitioned the Legislature, not the Citizens of Belleville, surely—and then if our Councillors will not do right, send other men.

As well might a neighbour interfere in matters that concerns another household, as an outsider go to Parliament and legalize a By-law for us.

And what can be thought of our representatives then who did not let the Warden know until the day before the final reading of the Bill. Trickery all the way through Let it be put down.

TRICKSTERS.

Only last week we were under the painful necessity to lay before our readers the character of the Belleville gentlemen who manipulate the affairs of the Grand Junction. We referred to their offers of bribery—their double dealing, and their willful lying at a late meeting, for which we drew down the ire of the clique, but we have a duty to perform and no abuse will deter us from doing it.

Mr. Wood held up his hands in pious horror of having anything behind the screen—nothing to keep back—perfectly honest and upright in all they were doing and saying.

Mr. Flint, Mayor of Belleville, with youthful boldness, asserted Mr. Wood's word was never called in question, and more than that, never would be. We suppose he must have meant that no one thought it worth believing at all, and hence never questioned it.

The following agreement made and signed three days before they were here shows whether they had anything to keep back, and also proves conclusively that their word or honor is not worth a straw. Even the unscrupulous Editor of the Review styles their acts "More Trickery," and it must be hard indeed, when he can not endorse it.

The following is an agreement sent to Lindsay on the 3rd of January, and they were here on the 5th.

"The Delegation from Lindsay having taken into consideration the explanations and terms proposed by the board of Directors at Belleville pledged themselves to recommend that a By-law be submitted to the Grand Junction Railway a bonus of fifty thousand doll ($50,000) subject however to the following conditions.

1. That the line be constructed from Belleville to Peterboro, thence direct to Lindsay, at a distance of not less than three miles north of the Village of Omemee.

2. That in the event of a branch being built to the Village of Bobcaygeon, that such branch be constructed from the main line on the west of Pigeon Creek.

3. That the work and repairing shops of the western portion of the line be permanently located at Lindsay.

4. That the said bonus of $50,000 be expended on the road commencing at Lindsay, and west of Omemee.

(Signed)

T. KEENAN, Chairman of Delegation.
THOS. LELSO, President. G. J. R.

Dated as Belleville, 3rd. Jan. 1872."

What confidence can be placed in men who on the 3rd of January, 1872, would sign the above agreement, and on the 5th of the same month come before a Peterborough audience and tell that audience that they, the deputation, were honest or truthful in saying they had nothing to keep back?

Their conduct throughout has been marked by duplicity. Their offer of bribes has alienated from them every honest man in the town and county, and their last appeal to Peterboro so disgusted the people that neither Mr. Wood, Mr. Bowell, nor Mr. Flint, would now be believed on any subject that Belleville or self is interested in. Their honor is at a discount here. The upright shun them, and those of their own kidney fear them, even sharpers are afraid of each other, it appears. We trust all the people of Belleville are not like those sent here on railway matters.

The Evangelists.

About 12 weeks ago Messrs. Chas. Carroll and Douglass Russel, Evangelists, came to this town at the invitation of the Baptist Church, and since that they have been holding meetings in that Church, in the Music Hall, and a few times in the Methodist Church, except on Saturdays, and generally three times on Sunday. The meetings were attended by members of all the Evangelical denominations. The Hall has been crowded on numerous occasions, and the utmost decorum was maintained. The greatest interest was manifested in the meetings and continued up to the very last day of their being here.

Mr. Russell preached his last sermon on Sunday evening, when the Hall was over crowded, many not being able to obtain seats. At the close of the meeting Mr. Taylor read the following address which was approved of by the people rising. The labours of these men have been very much appreciated here. On Sabbath evening the people remained over two hours manifesting visible signs of their sympathy with those gentlemen in the fields of their future labor.

THE ADDRESS.

Peterborough, Ont., D. C.
January 14th, 1872.

MESSRS. CHARLES CARROLL AND DOUGLAS RUSSEL.

Dear Brethren in the Lord Jesus Christ:—After so long a time in which we have enjoyed the great privilege of hearing the word of God in these revival meetings, as preached here for twelve weeks by you, we do feel that on this night, as the last of these services is brought to a close, we cannot do otherwise than express our appreciation of the precious opportunities set before us in this place, and to record our feelings of gratitude to the Lord for the rich blessing bestowed upon us through your instrumentality.

We thank the Lord who has here owned and blessed your labors in the conversion of so many precious souls, and thus granted you these additional seals to those which have already been so extensively given your ministry.

We thank the Lord for the great advance in light and liberty to which so many of his professing people have obtained under your faithful teaching.

Long, long, will the sweet remembrance of these solemn meetings remain in our hearts. Long as life shall last will the happy recollections abide of the life which God has here given to so many who were dead, and the liberty he has bestowed on so many others, who, though living were yet like Lazarus, bound hand and foot with grave cloths. And that, humanly speaking, this bondage and this death might have continued to this day but for these times of refreshing and these scenes of revival brought hither to us of the Lord through you—this thought deepens in our hearts the sympathy and the love we feel towards you, and the sorrow that arises at the thoughts of your leaving us.

And, now dear brethren, our hearts desire and earnest prayer for you to the Lord of the harvest who hath sent you forth unto the field, is, that the way may be opened to you for further and yet more abundant labours. That he would give you power from on high and fill you with his spirit, animating you for the fight—mightily strengthening your hand to wield his spiritual weapons, and greatly encouraging your hearts by victorious conflicts.

May He bless and refresh your own souls as you minister to the souls of others. And may it be your everlasting reward to be brought with the souls here given to you, unto His glorious presence with exceeding joy, at that great day of the Lord's coming.

We express with sadness the parting word, yet we rejoice to think that only on this side the Glory shall it be said

FAREWELL.

Proposed and unanimously adopted by the very crowded congregation of six hundred persons in the Music Hall of Peterborough, and signed on their behalf by

JOHN TAYLOR,

GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY.

The Line to come to Lindsay direct.

A Bonus of $50.000 asked for—Public Meeting.

From the Lindsay Post.

A deputation from this town held a conference with the Grand Junction Railway Board at Belleville on Wednesday of last week, and made very satisfactory arrangements by which the Board agreed to run their line to Lindsay from Belleville direct—Lindsay to give $50,000 in aid of the road. The deputation was composed of the following gentlemen:—Mr. S C. Wood, M. P. P.; Mr. D. Browne, Reeve; Mr. W. Grace, Mr. M. Morrison, Mr. W. McDonnell, Mr. T. Keenan, Mr. W. Margach, Mr. Neil McDougall, Sheriff, and Capt. Deacon. On the return of the deputation it was considered advisable to call a public meeting in the town hall in order that the full text of the agreement entered into between our representatives and the Railway Board might be made known and discussed. Accordingly a meeting was held on Friday last, and was very largely attended. His Worship the Mayor was called to the chair and Capt. Deacon appointed secretary. The Mayor of Bowmanville, Mr. Cubitt, being present, was invited to take a seat on the platform.

The Chairman having opened the proceedings by a few remarks called upon Mr. Wood to address the meeting.

Mr. Wood commenced by alluding to the various railway schemes which had been brought before the notice of the people of Lindsay, all of which would affect the interests of the town and back country. The time for prompt action had now arrived, for if we declined giving any opinion or were indifferent about the projected lines, some of them would come here. The Grand Junction Railway Board originally proposed to run their line from Belleville to Bobcaygeon via Peterborough, which would be detrimental to our interests, and the deputation considered that Lindsay should have a line to Bobcaygeon as well as Peterborough. Accordingly they went to Belleville by invitation of the Board. On Wednesday morning the deputation was formally organized by the appointment of Mr. Keenan as Chairman, and Capt. Deacon as Secretary. The Board met the deputation and their proposition was to give every information that Lindsay's representatives might desire. After some discussion, in which all matters connected with the question at issue were freely and frankly stated, an adjournment was made until the evening. The deputation accordingly returned to the "Dafoe House," and there the following ultimatum was drawn up by the secretary, endorsed by his colleagues, and subsequently agreed to by the Board:

The Delegation from Lindsay, having taken into consideration the explanations and terms proposed by the Board of Directors at Belleville pledge themselves to recommend that a By-law be submitted to the people of Lindsay granting to the Grand Junction Railway a bonus of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000) subject, however, to the following conditions, viz:

1. That the line be constructed from Belleville to Peterboro', thence direct to Lindsay, at a distance of not less than 3 miles north of the Village of Omemee.

2. That in the event of a branch being built to the Village of Bobcaygeon, that such branch be constructed from the main line on the West side of Pigeon Creek.

3. That the work and repairing shops of the Western portion of the line be permanently located at Lindsay.

4. That the said bonus of $50,000 be expended on the road commencing at Lindsay and West of Omemee.

The above document was signed by Mr. Keenan, chairman of the delegation, and by Mr. Thos. Kelso, President of the Grand Junction Railway. It was the original agreement and was not altered in one single respect. The building of the line here as said secure to our merchants an extended field of trade and make this a desirable town for other railways to connect with.

Mr. Wood concluded by urging upon the meeting to endorse the action of the delegates, who were animated in their efforts solely by a desire to benefit the material interests of the town.

In answer to Mr. L. Maguire, Mr. Wood stated that the first proposal of the Company was to touch at Omemee, and amalgamate with the Midland, but by the terms now proposed there would be no amalgamation there.

Mr W. McDonell agreed with all Mr. Wood had stated as to the beneficial results which would follow by having the line built from Belleville to Lindsay direct. It would place us in closer communication with the eastern markets, and as for the lumbering and other interests, all dangers of navigation would be avoided. He thought the project was an excellent one for Lindsay, and we had better spend $100,000 rather than lose the railway. It was a most important thing that Lindsay should have the western work-shops, which would make the town a place of considerable importance.

Mr. Sheriff McDougall pointed out the great disadvantage it would be to Lindsay to have a railway constructed from Peterborough to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls west to the Georgian Bay; and it would not do for us to offer even $40,000 if the railway was to amalgamate at Omemee. Two rival lines from the east would have the effect of reducing tariffs; and to secure the Grand Junction line we must give according to our means. We must also support the one coming from Toronto, which would offer great inducements to us, nor must the Bowmanville line be lost sight of; for Lindsay had an interest in all the projected railways.

Mr. Keenan said that the delegates went into an agreement with the Grand Junction Board in the full belief that what they did was for the benefit of the town. All should be united in support of the scheme, for it would affect every ratepayer.

The following resolution was then put and carried unanimously:

Moved by Mr. J. R. Dundas, seconded by Mr. John Knowlson. That this meeting having heard the explanations of the Delegation who visited Belleville a few days ago, approve of the agreement entered into between the said Deputation on behalf of this Town with the Directors of the Grand Junction Railway.

The Chairman expressed the opinion that it was desirable to elicit discussion on railway projects generally, as he did not consider that the meeting had been called specially for considering one special project. His friend, Mr. Cubitt was there, and those present would doubtless wish to hear an address from him as a representative of the Bowmanville, Lindsay and Bobcaygeon line. He must not be understood as being hostile to the Grand Junction Railway; on the contrary he cordially approved of it; but he thought some explanation of its financial position was desirable.

Mr. Wood replied that it would be unjust to Bowmanville, which had but one representative, and hardly fair to the people of Lindsay, to go into a general discussion of the various railway projects that evening. If they played off the Grand Junction scheme against another they would humble themselves; and if they showed hostility to it the people of Peterborough would take all the advantage that might accrue therefrom. The Grand Junction was not hostile to either the Bowmanville or Nipissing; but it was the proposition of the former solely that came up legitimately for discussion at present. There was no time to lose. If they did not accede to the proposition made now they would never have another chance of doing so. The delegation would gladly bring it before them again, but the Grand Junction Board must have an answer once and for all. He might mention that the gentlemen composing that Board were the most prominent residents of Belleville—men of unquestioned honor and integrity. They had guaranteed bonuses amounting to $200,000; stock had been taken representing another $200,000; and allowing 925,000 for all short-comings, there would remain $375,000. Besides this $50,000 was expected from Lindsay and another bonus from Peterborough; while the line would receive a legislative grant also. Mr. Wood concluded by suggesting the formation of a railway committee and the calling of another public meeting at an early date to consider the advisability of assisting the Bowmanville and Nipissing railways.

Mr. Cubitt agreed with Mr. Wood's last suggestion and assured the meeting that the Bowmanville directors would treat the people fairly and honorably and lay their schemes fully before them.

It was then proposed by Mr. Sheriff McDougall, seconded by Capt. Deacon, that a permanent Committee be appointed to look after the interests of the town during the present year in the many Railway projects now under consideration.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Wm. McDonell, seconded by Mr. Sheriff McDougall, that the undermentioned gentlemen be requested to act as a Railway Committee for the present year, with power to add to their number: T. Keenan, W. McDonell, D. Browne, J. B. Knowlson, W. Needler, C. L. Baker, J. Dobson, G. Bertram, J. McLennan, O. Bigelow, J. R Dundas, M. Morison, L. Maguire, A. Wright, A. Hudgeth, A. Lecourse, G. Dormer, C. B. Orde, M. Deane, W. L. Bussell, S C. Wood, W. Grace, N. McDougall, W. Margach, Geo. Crandall, W. McBurney, W. J. Thirkell, and Simon Beaton.—Carried.

It was decided that Mr. T. Keenan should be appointed Chairman, and Capt. Deacon be requested to act as Honorary Secretary.

A Letter from John Hunter, Esq., Late Reeve of Galway, now in California.

ANAHEIM, LOS ANGELOS, CALIFORNIA.
Nov. 29th, 1871.

DEAR MR. STRATTON,—

You, no doubt, will be surprised to be addressed from such a portion of the earth. When last in Peterboro I had not an opportunity of seeing you, I, therefore, could not say good bye. Believing that my impressions of the country through which I passed might afford your readers some amusement, I have compiled a few thoughts as opportunity offered as I went along. They had to be written while waiting at the different stations, and being an Emigrant passenger we had several opportunities not enjoyed by first-class passengers.

I deviated through the country by way of Beavertown. I need not say anything about that portion of the road until I reached Toronto; that portion is well known to your readers in general; having friends on that route I preferred it in order to see them before starting on my long trip by the overland Pacific R. Road to San Francisco.

Myself and whole family started from Barrie on the Northern R R., on Friday morning, the 27th of October, and reached Toronto at 10.20 a. m. I expected there to buy greenbacks enough to serve our wants in crossing the Continent, but was delayed, and had to content myself with Canada money, from the following circumstance:

The Great Western Depot is at the foot of Yonge Street, and the Northern is at the Market. In getting our trunks from the luggage car, one covered with a hairy skin was wanting, and it being impossible to write the number of the station on it as is done by the R. R. Officials, it had been left at the Brock Street Station of the Northern Railway. There being no time for delay, I had to jump aboard a chariot and go in search; and having got the missing trunk made my way back to the Station.—I had barely time to purchase tickets and get my luggage checked before the Conductor ordered "all aboard for Hamilton." Suffice it to say that for that little trick I had to pay one dollar, but I had no alternative except remain 24 hours in Toronto. We started, eight in number, on the Western for Hamilton, where we were to meet the train from the Suspension Bridge to Windsor, but which was delayed about 2½ hours by the heating of an axle on some palace car. Ultimately we got aboard for Detroit and made our way through the country with great rapidity. We had, however to abandon the heated car at Paris, on the way, we reached Windsor in safety.

The G. W. R is certainly a great improvement on the G. T. R. or Northern in smoothness. The Company did not seem to have a smoking car attached, and all whom common decency would tolerate in no other car, seemed to think in our car they had a Divine Right to smoke, so they kept up that abominable nuisance all the way—adding at intervals to the established nuisance, that of mingling hymns and jocular songs.

The country I saw certainly looked well, and seemed well adapted to agriculture and fruit growing. At Paris, the shades of night let fall her mantle and hid all from view, much to my regret—and only for which my epistle on this par would be much longer. But for one in the attire of an Official desiring my presence in a forward, car we should not have known we were crossing the Ferry, as the cars are run on to the steamer and the occupants were not disturbed into the car into which I had been summoned. Here I had the first interview with one of Uncle Sam's Grandsons. The Baggage Master persists that I begin to unpack our rope bound trunks, and present to the gentlemen in question a full bill of parcels. The Official, however, behaved in a gentlemanly manner. Satisfying himself at the same time that all my earthly goods were of such a nature as to be beneath his notice

Over the Grave.

Up on the bleak hillside,
Down 'neath the earth and snow,
Unconscious of what may betide
Out on this cold world wide.
She sleeps, freed from anguish and woe.

Winds o'er thy tomb do sigh.
Wintry winds, cold and chill,
Yet thou in thy slumber wrapt dost lie,
Heedless of storm or midnight cry,
Up on the snow-clad, moon-lit hill.

Oh! 'tis a silent sleep
That thou hast, lov'd one dear;
God from all harm thee safe doth keep,
No more in sadness dost thou weep
The bitter, soul drawn, burning tear.

A troubl'd voyage had'st thou,
Toss'd on the seething wave,
But all is calmness, stillness now,
Never a shade doth cross thy brow
Down in the narrow, peaceful grave.

Reach'd is the shining shore,
Eternal peace is thine,
Cross'd is the flood, the battle's o'er,
Earth's weary races shall vex no more,
For God is Love, and Love's Divine.

Husband (Returned from a call on Judge Jones). Well Mary, I have examined those certificates and found them straight as a string, there are so many imitations and counterfeits sticking like barnacles to every good medicine that I have learned to look upon the good and bad as one alike. It is very wrong however, this PAIN-KILLER of Perry Davis has stood the test of time Doctors and Druggists have not been able to hush it up, it's as you say, Mary in everybodys house and I am astonished to find it has been doing such a world of good about here and we have known nothing about it.

Wife:—It must have cured somebodys Rheumatism or you would'nt have been converted so easily.

Husband:—Converted, why it has cured a dozen of cases about here whithin a year, Simon Tinkler who you know used to be such an awful sufferer with it and was laid up half the time, why it was this same Perry Davis' PAIN-KILLER that cured him. Geo Trotter who Doctor Squills used to pity so much and call such a great sufferer, he too was cured with the PAIN-KILLER and what more be writes that he paid Doctor Squills over one hundred Dollars for attending him and was growing worse all the while, here my dear rub some of it on my shoulder at once I am through with Squills, if Pain-Killer can't cure me nothing will I am convinced of that.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

MONTREAL WITNESS

PROSPECTUS FOR 1872.

During twenty-five years existance the circulation of the WITNESS has increased from 800 to about 30,000; or counting by sheets issued, instead of 800 a week we have 1 round numbers:—

Semi-Weekly, 3,000 x 2	6,000
Weekly	7,000
	79,000

The same rates of increase for the next quarter of a century would give us an entry into 500,000 families for 7,900,000 sheets.—Those figures are no more incredible than the present ones would have been twenty-five years ago, and we shall do our best, with assistance of constantly improving appliances and facilities for reaching the public, and counting largely on the rapid growth of our Dominion, and of its chief city, to realize them.

PLATFORM.

We stand just where we always stood, and look for success to that aid which has hitherto helped us.

CHANGES.

The DAILY WITNESS, hitherto issued at Noon, and 2,4, and 6 o'clock, P M, will during the coming session of the Dominion of Parliament see possibly thereafter, appear also at 8 o'clock in the morning, all other editions continuing as heretofore. The DAILY WITNESS will be sold at every town and village for ONE CENT. Daily Witness $3 per annum, payment in advance.

TRI-WEEKLY WITNESS.—Subscribers to the SEMI-WEEKLY WITNESS will after the 1st January, be supplied with a TRI-WEEKLY of the shape and size of the present DAILY WITNESS, which will be found to contain about as much matter as the present SEMI-WEEKLY, thus making an addition of fifty per cent. to the reading matter without any addition of price TRI-WEEKLY WITNESS $2 per annum in advance.

CLUBS.

We have never been able to offer any inducements which was borne fruit equal to the assistance of those whose sincere friendship for the enterprise has prompted them to exertion on our behalf.

In all editions where one person remits for one year in advance for eight persons, he will be entitled to one copy additional for himself. Or any person remiting $8 for our publication will be entitled to one dollar's worth additional.

ADVANTAGES.

We here announce cheaper paper than can be got anywhere else, cheaper advertising, we think, in proportion to circulation, than is offered in Canada. Whether the papers are good, as well as cheap the public are the best judges. All the departments of reading matter will be kept up as heretofore. We are giving increased attention to the commercial department.

It is our intention in future to have at least one serial story running in each edition of the WITNESS and generally more in the Daily and we hope also to present to our readers one or two owned engravings per week.

Ayer's Cathartic

For all the purposes of a Medicine

Purgative Pill, or one to be universally used by everyone as a cathartic, now we may believe so many by adopted into use every country on almost all classes, as this most efficient purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is a more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cured them: those who have not, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and all know that what it does once it does always—that it never fails through any fault or neglect of its composition. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of their remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cures are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by any body. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the box, for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels miserably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better. From their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as has this excellent remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a provision against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

Asthma is always relieved and often wholly cured by it.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of them here, or attempt to assure the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatous poisons.

As its name implies, it does Cure, and does not fail. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Mineral, Zinc, nor any other virulent poison to the human system whatever, it in no case leaves any ruinous effects, either a shattered constitution or a diseased liver, as the usual effects of the various mercurial and quinine preparations, are. In the history of Ague medicine, the pride is justified in the unprecedented success and cures of the following cases, selected, as they are, from hundreds of the most remarkable that have come to our knowledge. Many of these cases had been given up by their physicians as incurable, and in other cases, and where other remedies had wholly failed.

Unacclimated persons, either resident in, or travelling through miasmatic localities, will be protected by taking the AGUE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver into healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many truly remarkable cures, where other remedies had failed.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold everywhere around the world.

Song of the Shears.

Weary and not over-stout,
The victim of heartless quizzers,
A news editor sat, with his elbows out,
Plying his pencil and scissors.
Clip! Clip! Clip!
In mucilage, tatters and tears!
And still, with a wries of delirous dip,
He sang the "Song of the Shears."

Clip! Clip! Clip!
While the Foreman calls for more!
And clip—clip—clip,
Till the "devil" looks in at the door!
Its oh! to be a councilman,
Or even a school trustee,
A mayor, policeman, or anything,
Or anything else but me!

Clip! Clip! Clip!
Till the jaws drop open wide;
Till the elbows creak like an old barn door,
And you take that "stitch"—in the side!
Enquirers, Tribunes, Gazettes,
And Stars that make you dose,
Till over the Herald you fall asleep,
And clip off the end of your nose!

Oh, women with paper curls!
With bustles that rattle and quiver!
It is not papers you're wearing out,
But a human editor's liver!
Clip! Clip! Clip!
Hunting for something new,
Which the managing editor swears after all
Is as old as a wandering Jew!

But why do I talk of the Jews—
That race of the nasal hook?
If only I had such a nose for news,
To get it by hook or crook!
By hook or crook, and I wouldn't be slow,
Because of the last I keep;
O God! that bustles should be so huge,
And Chinese labor so cheap!

James Fisk, Jun.

Harper's Weekly, for December, 1862, contained the following notice of the late James Fisk, jr.:—Three years ago, James Fisk, jr., was comparatively unknown. Now there are few men in our city who command so large a share of public notice. He is a man of large wealth, and is the centre of attraction in Wall street, in theatrical circles, and in the law courts.—Perhaps he has not genius: his education may be deficient; but his practical shrewdness, his almost reckless boldness, and his unparalleled effrontery, make up for the absence of these qualifications. He is known as the man who may be a friend to day and an enemy to morrow; as one who comes to his conclusions rapidly, and almost by instinct; and a man whose hostility cannot be provoked with impunity. Having said this, what more could we say as regards his peculiar characteristics?

James Fisk, jr., was the son of a Vermont peddler. At the age of 17 he obtained employment of a very humble character in Van Amburgh's menagerie, his occupation being to assist in the erection of tents, and to sweep out and keep clean the cages of animals. His employer, noticing his capacity, promoted him to the position of ticket collector. In this capacity he accompanied Van Amburgh in his various tours through the United States, the Canadas, and Europe—a service extending over a period of 8 years. Leaving Van Amburgh at 25 years of age, he determined to pursue the calling of his father, and returned to his native State of Vermont for that purpose. He commenced his career as a peddler by selling small articles, such as pencils, pens, etc., on the sidewalk of the different towns of the State. In this way, by dint of perseverance, he saved a little money, and having succeeded in raising a small additional sum, he purchased a horse and waggon, and made a fresh start in life as a peddler of dry-goods. He visited all the principal towns and villages of Vermont, and succeeded in gaining so large a custom in the places to which he travelled, that his humble one-horse waggon was no longer capacious enough for the conveyance of his goods. He discarded it, therefore, and invested in a much larger one, drawn by four horses. By and-by he extended his field of operations and travelled through Massachusetts and Connecticut as well as Vermont, until finally, the gross amount of his sales attracted the attention of a Boston firm from whom he was in the habit of buying goods. In 1860 they made proposals to him to join their house, to which he assented, and Jas. Fisk, jr., became a partner in the firm of Jordan, Marsh, & Co., of Boston. But the firm do not appear to have been so well pleased with James Fisk the partner as with James Fisk the customer, for at the end of two years they paid him down the large sum of $64,000 to leave the firm.

It so happened that at this time some parties in Boston were anxious to purchase the Stoningtonline of Steamships, then owned by Mr. Daniel Drew. James Fisk was aware of this circumstance, and, thinking he could turn his knowledge to good account, he came in 1863, to New York. Obtaining an introduction to Mr. Drew, he managed so to ingratiate himself into the favor of that gentleman that he employed him to conduct the negotiation for the sale of the steamers. In this he was eminently successful. The sale was completed entirely to Mr. Drew's satisfaction, and the ability and shrewdness which Fisk had displayed throughout the negotiation gained for him Mr. Drew's good will and patronage, and an introduction to Wall Street.

Fisk now commenced to operate on his own account; he entered into a variety of speculative transactions in government stocks, gold and other securities. Success, however, did not attend him in Wall street as it had done when peddling through the country; the greater number of his speculations were disastrous in their results, and in two years' time James Fisk had lost every dollar he had in the world. He had, however, a friend in Mr. Daniel Drew, who, in 1865, assisted him to form the firm of Fisk, Belding & Co., for the purpose of carrying on the business of stockbrokers, and gave him substantial aid by putting business into their hands, and employing them as brokers in large undertakings.

In 1867, Mr. Fisk, in connection with Mr. Jay. Gould, succeeded in making a large sum of money by operations in Erie stock to the amount of $10,000,000 and were thus able to depress the general value of Erie stock from 72½ to 35. Mr. Fisk's share of the profits resulting from these operations amounted, it is said, to $1,300,000.

Mr. Fisk's next operation was to purchase the whole of the block of which Pike's Opera-house forms a part, for the sum of $820,000. This transaction was a highly profitable one. He leased to the Erie Railroad Co. a small portion of the property for 13 years, at an annual rental of $75,000. This was in itself a very handsome return on the gross amount invested in the whole property: but Mr. Fisk retained to himself the Opera-house, all the large stores, and a great number of private houses. He has also bought the building formerly known as Brougham's Theatre; and, having somewhat unceremoniously ousted that gentleman and his company, he installed there Mademoiselle Irma and a French troupe of opera bouffe singers.

With his more recent operations, including the proprietorship of the French Theatre in this city, our readers are well acquainted. Mr. Fisk is now about thirty-nine years of age.

Encroachments of the Ocean.

We read the following in one of our exchanges: "It is estimated that during the last five centuries more than $250,000,000 worth of land has been washed away from the eastern coast of England by the encroachments of the sea. A number of villages and towns which used to be set down on the old maps have entirely disappeared."

To this we may add, that this is only the illustration of a single instance, proving at what rate the ocean is extending its surface at the expense of the surrounding land. In some localities the waves may increase the land, principally at the mouths of large rivers; but this again is at the expense of the banks through which these rivers flow, and such increase, besides, does not compare with the enormous amount of decrease continually going on along different coasts. During a visit to Havre, some years ago, after an examination of the western coast of France in the neighborhood of that city, we were struck with the marks of the rapid inroads there made by the ocean; and we were particularly impressed, as we never had read any account of it, proving it not to be noticed as much as it deserves. South of Havre the coast is about 100 feet high, hard sand with boulders, a table-land on top, well wooded and covered with fine roads and residences. This coast is being continually undermined by the waves, and presents a perpendicular wall, full of fresh fractures; the boulders once contained in washed away portions forming the bottom of the sea near the coast, only visible at low tide, while the sand has been removed by the waves. Every stormy high tide damages the base of this perpendicular sand-wall, and as the tides there run up to a height of some 20 or 30 feet, they are very effective.

The western coast of Belgium and Holland, separated from England by the German Ocean, is washing away at the same rate as is the case in England. As this land is low, however, the process differs in its details. It is known that the soil in Holland is partially below and partially very little above the ocean's level, and that dikes have been erected to keep it dry. These dikes are, however, only found along the rivers and inlets; along the true sea-shores immense sand heaps have been thrown up by the ocean-waves themselves, forming a dike of irregular dimensions, consisting of a series of countless connected sand-hills, of some 50, 100, or 150 feet high, and forming a belt as long as the whole coast and of a width of ½ a mile, 1 mile, and in some places as much as three miles. When the western winds and waves sweep the coast, the sands of the shore are thrown up and over these hills.

They slowly encroach on the fertile land behind, and this sometimes in certain localities as much as 10 or 20 feet in a single year. We have seen a small wooden house of one of the keepers of a coast-light, discovered at the sea-side of a range of sand-hills, which thirty years before had been erected at the inside or land side of the same hills. It had become slowly embedded in the sand and had to be abandoned. It was then buried under the hills for thirty years, till one fine morning, after a storm, the keeper saw something dark sticking out at the sea side of the hills, and on investigation found that it was a corner of his long-forgotten house, which appeared removed to the outside, while, in fact, the whole range of hills had in 30 years traveled over the house. At occasional very low tides, we have walked over the edges of the foundation-walls of a once large city, Wester Schouwen, in the German Ocean near the south-western extremity of the Island of Schouwen; these remains are now several hundred feet outside the belt of sand-hills described; but were, of course, once inside the same, as now the location is totally uninhabitable. This operation has gone on from prehistoric times, when the English Channel was not in existence and the German Ocean was a mere bay, communicating with the Atlantic Ocean only in the north between Scotland and Norway. The wearing away of the coast all around this bay, and its consequent steady enlargement, caused it to break through the present channel, to which no doubt the washing away of the French coast referred, and of the south-eastern part of England by the Aalantic Ocean, contributed its share, making at last Great Britain an island.

When to this action we add the fact that Holland is sinking slowly, it is not an exaggerated estimate to state that, during the last 500 years, that country has lost as much as $500,000,000 worth of territory in this way. At present the Zuyder Sea is making similar inroads in the interior of the land, as the Harrlem Lake once did, extending its surface steadily. It is not to be wondered at that the people of that country have enough of their exterior enemy, the ocean, and are going to annihilate the interior enemy, the Zuyder Sea, in the same manner as they have disposed of the Haarlem Lake.

To our remarks on surface movements of the earth, we may add the fact that it has been found that the city of St. Petersburg, the capital of Russia, is sinking, as evident from the inundation by high ocean tides, which now rise much higher than in former times. A few days ago, the excitement about it ran so high as to cause the suggestion of the capital back to Moscow, and the exit of some Russian families; but at present the the excitment appears temporarily postponed.

In regard to inroads of the ocean, we have not far to go ourselves. At Long Branch in New-Jersey, the ocean washes so much away, with eastern storms that valuable properties along the shore is becoming worthless, because nobody will buy land which in a few years will disappear; deliberations have gone on about the means of checking it, and no doubt it may be somewhat retarded; but the ocean is too mighty to be totaly checked, except by system of slow retreat the Hollanders follow in their system of dikes, aided by nature in her formation of the sand-hills.

It is not only the sandy coast of New-Jersey which is thus diminishing, but even the rocky shores of Massachusetts share the same fate, only in a slower degree, as they offer more resistance. At the occasion of an excursion on board a steamer along this coast, which we made, in the summer of 1869, with Professor Agassiz, that learned gentleman expressed to us his conviction "that that coast was wearing away at a fearful rate," and that once the spot where our steamer was then sailing was solid rock; in answer to the question how many years ago this was the case, Professor Agassiz did not committ himself with a positive answer, but evaded the question by replying with a smile that it was long before the pilgrim fathers landed on Plymouth Rock.

Sidereal Time, Solar Time, and Mean Time.

The rotation of our earth is perfectly uniform, that is to say, the most careful observation has failed to detect therein the least acceleration, or irregularity. There has undoubtedly been a time when the earth rotated slower, namely, in that geological period when its mass was more bulky. By cooling, however, it has contracted, and consequently attained a more rapid rotation. To make this more clear, imagine a stone tied to a string and whirled around; if the string be allowed to wind itself around the centre of rotation, the nearer the stone approaches this centre the faster it will move. Mayer thinks that a like shrinking of the earth still goes on, and that there would be a continuous acceleration if the ocean tides, striking the eastern coasts of continents and islands, did not cause a retardation, which at the present day balances the acceleration which the the contraction would otherwise cause. He further thinks that when the contraction ceases, a retardation will commence, and the days become longer and longer, by the effect of the ocean tides.

At present, however, the motion is uniform, and is most minutely recorded by observations of the stars. A star in Aries is taken as the starting-point, and when this passes the meridian, it is 12 o'clock, for the so-called sidereal day. This day by no means corresponds with the solar day, as the number of apparent revolutions of the starry heavens is 366 in a common year, and 367 in a leap-year; the stars going every day about four minutes ahead of the sun, making the sidereal day so much shorter than the solar day. Another distinctive characteristic of the sidereal days is, that they are all of exactly the same length, as is not the case with the solar; for this reason astronomers use the sidereal day for their observations, as they can verify their clocks on any clear night by simply watching the moment that some well-known star passes the meridian.

It makes a strange impression on persons not familiar with astronomical science when they visit an observatory, and see the clocks to all appearances going all alike and all out of time; printing, for instance, late in the afternoon, at 10 or 11 o'clock. But this will be now clear to our readers, if they consider that a clock which goes every day four minutes too fast will differ six hours in about three months.

We said that the solar days have not the same length, and this may cause some surprise, particularly after our statement that the rotation of the earth is so perfectly uniform. The solar day would be equally uniform if the earth in its course around the sun moved with uniform velocity, and kept at the same distance from that luminary. It is owing to this revolution that the starry heavens appear to make one revolution more per year than the sun, which gets behind one day in every 366. As, however, the velocity of the earth's yearly motion and its distance from the sun is variable, it is clear that, as soon as the earth moves slower, the sun will remain less behind, and if the earth moves faster, it will get more behind; consequently the sun's apparent motion is not uniform, and its passage of the meridian will not take place after perfectly equal periods of time. This difference is as much as half an hour for a period of some hundred days, and it was a cause of great trouble to those who wanted to regulate good clocks by the sun alone. Through their attempts these irregularities of the sun were discovered, and it was finally decided to regulate clocks so that they run uniformly, and only agree with the solar time four times a year. That is to say, one half-year they will be about fifteen minutes ahead and another half-year as much behind. Tables of those differences have been calculated, so that those wishing to regulate their clocks to the local mean time may, by solar observation at midday, by adding or subtracting a certain number of minutes, obtain the same.

In order to obtain this solar time approximately, sundials are used; more correct results are obtained by instruments made for the single purpose of observing the passage of the sun through the meridian. Ship-masters use the octants or sextants, and observe two periods of time, one in the forenoon and one in the afternoon, that the sun is at exactly the same height above the horizon. The solar midday must be exactly between these periods, and a simple calculation gives the time of the locality where they are, which, when compared with the time of the chronometer, regulated after Washington or Greenwich time, gives, after the rule of 15° of longitude for every hour's difference in time, or one quarter degree for every minute in time, the longitude of the place of observation

Ship Building in Britain and Canada.

The maritime supremacy of Great Britain was never more marked than it is at the present time. This is not only manifested by the fact that the sails of her fleets whiten every sea, but in the large number of ships which are annually turned out of her dockyards. The demand for new vessels seems to steadily increase, and the amount of capital and labor now invested in that important branch of industry in England and Scotland has become exceedingly large.

Some interesting returns have recently been published in the Mother Country in regard to her ship-building interests. From this source we learn that during the last statistical year there were 499 wooden, 435 iron, and 30 composite vessels constructed. Of these, the tonnage of the iron vessels was far the greatest—the proportion being 271,760, iron tonnage, as against 58,530 of wood. The 30 composite vessels were of 12,316 tons. We should judge from these facts, that nearly all the large class of sea-going are now made of iron, and the smaller of wood and composite—the latter, apparently, gaining somewhat in popularity.

The total number of vessels turned out was 974, and we observe that sailing vessels were most in number, although the smallest as regards tonnage. There were 541 sailing vessels as against 433 steamers, but the latter had a capacity of 225,674 tons, whilst the former only can carry 117,932 tons. Glasgow takes the lead in shipbuilding, and a fine sight it is on a spring morning to pass down the Clyde and see thousands of men at work on all sizes and descriptions of vessels. Sunderland and Newcastle take rank next to Glasgow, the respective number of ships turned out by each during the year being: Glasgow, 105, Sunderland, 93, and Newcastle, 71.

The Dominion follows closely after Great Britain as a maritime power, and although the demand for wooden vessels is not so great as it once was, still our ship-building continues to be an important interest.—The different Provinces contributed as follows:

PROVINCES.	NUMBER.	TONNAGE.
Ontario	45	4,575
Quebec	55	19,383
Nova Scotia	141	33,659
New Brunswick	88	35,599

From these figures New Brunswick may be said to take the lead in ship-construction, for although more in number were turned out in Nova Scotia, the capacity of the New Brunswick vessels was much the largest. We hope to see this important branch of industry revive and increase in all the Provinces. We have plenty of wood and iron—the prime necessities of shipbuilding—and with proper capital and skill, there seems no good reason why our builders should not be able to compete with those of any other country in the world.—Monetary Times.

NEWFOUNDLAND COMMERCE.

It is much to be regretted that Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island still stand aloof from Confederation. We say this as much in their own interest as that of the six Provinces now comprising the Dominion, for we are assured that the union, particularly in a commercial sense, would be beneficial to all concerned.

The trade of Newfoundland has become quite important, and appears to be healthy and growing. Their imports in 1870 were of the value of $6,555 849. and their exports, $6,984,543. In 1869 their exports reached a higher amount, namely, $7,300,636; but it is certain that when the returns for 1871 are made up they will surpass those of any previous year The cause of this is the success which has attended the fisheries generally during the year just closed, but more particularly the seal fisheries. The largest number of seals ever previously obtained was 329,672, in the year 1867; but during 1871 nearly 600,000 were captured! This extraordinary success has largely swelled their exports for the last year, which must range somewhere about $8,000,000.

The whole of the exports of Newfoundland may be said to be marine products, and as nearly the whole population is engaged in the fisheries, they import nearly everything they eat and wear. To show the run of their trade, we annex a statement showing the principal countries with which they dealt in 1870, and the amount of their transactions:

Countries.	Imports.	Exports.
Canada	$852,864	$214,758
United States	1,516,377	312,204
Great Britain	2,802,397	2,052,931
Nova Scotia	498,113	195,392
Brazil		1,126,571
British W. Indies	313,657	352,974
Foreign W. Indies	232,430
Spain		847,494
Hamburg	193,248
Portugal		672,260
Italy		252,166

The trade of Newfoundland with the United States—at least their exports—has largely fallen off under the influence of the high duties which the latter have exacted for several years past. One effect of this has been to increase their direct sales of fish to Brazil, Spain, Portugal, and other distant countries. Among the articles of which they buy most largely from abroad are flour, woollen goods, boots and shoes, pork and butter. They use our Government largely—in fact, they purchased pretty freely from us in 1870, as the above figures show: $1, 500,000 worth of woollen from Great Britain, and nearly $400,000 of leather manufactures. If united to the Dominion, there is little doubt our manufacturers would supply the great bulk of these goods and there is every reason to believe that our annual trade would expand almost immediately to $2,000,000, to the advantage and profit of both countries.

It gives us much pleasure to know that Newfoundland is so prosperous, and that its fisheries continue to take the lead of all others in the world. The fisheries of British America produce, according to the Hon. Mr. Mitchell, $16,500,000 per annum and of this amount Newfoundland yields 65 per cent., Nova Scotia coming next with 34 per cent. It is to be hoped the day is not far distant when the people of Newfoundland will link their fortunes with the Dominion, thus completing the edifice of Confederation, and adding strength and beauty to the whole fabric.—Monetary Times.

How to Cure Hams.

Almost every farmer has his own particular recipe for curing his pork and hams. But this is not saying that every one of them succeeds in producing a first-rate article, and there is no doubt but some, at least, might improve upon their present mode of curing hams. The following recipes are said to be those after which the premiums were cured that gained a prize at the Maryland State Fair:

FIRST PREMIUM.—Mix two and one-half pounds saltpetre, finely powdered, one-half bushel fine salt, two pounds brown sugar, one-half gallon molasses. Rub the meat with the mixture; pack with skin down. Turnover once a week and add a little salt. After being down three or four weeks, take out wash, and hang up two or three weeks until it is dry. Then smoke with hickory wood three or four week; then bag or pack away in a cool place (not a cellar) in chaff or hay.—Thomas Love.

SECOND PREMIUM.—The meat, after being cut out, must be rubbed piece by piece, with very finely powdered saltpeter, on the flesh side and where the leg is cut off—a table spoonful (not heaped) to each ham; a dessert spoonful to each shoulder, and about half that quantity to each mid-ling and jaw; the meat be rubbed in. Then salt it by packing a thin coating of salt on the flesh side of each side, say one-half an inch thick; pack the pieces on a scaffolding, or on a floor with strips of plank laid a few inches apart all over it (that is under the meat); the pieces must be placed skin side down, in the following order: First lavers, ham; second, shoulders; third, jaws; forth, middlings; take the spare ribs out of the middlings. The meat must be in this wise six weeks if the weather is mild; eight if cold, brine being allowed to run freely.—J. Howard McHenry.

THIRD PREMIUM.—fine salt, three pounds of brown sugar, two and one-half pound saltpetre, one-half gallon neat molasses.—Mix these ingredients together, then rub each piece well with the mixture until all be absorbed. The meat must be taken out of the pickle once a week for six weeks; the two first times the meat is taken out, there is to be a plate of alum salt added to the pickle.—Mrs. William H. Harriott FORTH PREMIUM.—Two and one-half pounds saltpetre, dried and finely powdered, one-half bushel best Liverpool salt, three pounds of brown sugar, and one-half gallon molasses. Mix all in a vessel, rub the meat well with the same, and pack with skin down. The above is the exact amount required for 1,000 pounds of pork. After being in salt three or four weeks, take out, wash clean the pieces, dry and hang it up for smoking. Three weeks is sufficient to smoke them throughly by fire made of hickory wood.—When smoked, take down or pack away in chaff or cut straw. Examine them occasionally, and if found to be at all damp, renew the packing with dry material.

Opportunities.

How many there are in the Church of Christ who sigh for opportunities of usefulness, while they never take hold of those close at hand. They want something to do—some great thing like Naaman of old, and the simple waters of Jordan are despised for them, but if we remember that life is made up of little things and the daily consideration of these little things may bring about great results, like the small seeds which scattered bring great harvest, we would not look further than our every day walk and path for means of usefulness. It is said that a room may be swept to the glory of God. I am sure it is so; good living is good preaching, and the heart tuned to the praise of redeeming grace will give forth no discordant music. In these words: Whether therefore, ye eat or drink or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God,' be your life motto, we shall not need to sigh for opportunities of usefulness. A pious couple in England after morning family prayer with their children and servants meet for a few minutes in their own room to ask the Lord for work. 'Lord, what will Thou have us do to-day. Let us work for Thee, O Lord!, and expecting in faith the answer, their senses are quickened to perceive and seize the opportunities, and they are wonderfully and remarkably blessed. 'Ye have not, because ye ask not.'

A lady once writing a letter to a young naval officer who was almost a stranger, thought, 'shall I close this as an anybody would, or shall I say a word for my Master,' and lifting up her heart for a moment she wrote, telling him that his constant change of scene and place was an apt illustration of the words; 'Here we have no continuing city,' and asked if he could say 'I seek one to come' In trembling she folded it, and sent it of. Back came the answer: 'Thank you, so much for those kind words. My parents are dead. I am an orphan, and no one has spoken to me like that since my mother died long years ago. The bow shot at a venture hit home and the young man shortly rejoiced in the fulness of the blessings of the Gospel of peaceful Christains, How often do we close a letter as any body would, when we might say a word for Jesus. —Mrs Campbell, in N. Y. Witness.

BATTER CAKES.—Add a teaspoonful of carbonate of soda, and a little salt to a pan of sour milk. Stir it in sufficient meal to make it into a thick batter, and cook it like pancakes in a frying-pan.

CORN MUFFINS.—Mix together a quart of buttermilk, a few eggs, some flower, and enough meal to form a paste. Then add a teaspoonful of melted butter, and some salt. Then bake it in a well-buttered pan.

ANOTHER WAY TO MAKE BATTER CAKES.—Mix throughly a quart of meal in the same quantity of boiling water, and two raw eggs previously well beaten up. Then season the batter with salt, and cook it as above directed.

A CHEAP WAY TO MAKE BUTTER CAKES.—Make a batter of equal parts of meal and boiling water, add a little salt, and allow it to become nearly cold. Then mix some yeast with it, and when it has sufficiently fermented cook it in the usual way.

The Abenakis.

During the old Indian war in America, a troop of Abenakis defeated an English detachment. The conquered could not escape from enemies more nimble than they in running, and used to pursue them; they were treated with a barbarity of which there are few examples, even among savages. A young English officer, pressed by two savages, who appreciated him with their axes raised, had no hope of escaping death. He only dreamed of selling his life dearly.—At the same time an old savage, armed with a bow came up, and prepared to pierce him with an arrow; but, at the moment, he suddenly lowered his bow, and ran and threw himself between the young officer and the two savages who were going to murder him. The latter retired respectfully.

The old man took the Englishman by the hand, removed all his apprehension by his kind manner, and led him to his cabin where he continued to treat him with unfailing kindness. He made more of a companion than a slave of him; he taught him the language of the Abenakis, and rude arts in use among those people. They lived very well together with one another. One thing only caused the young Englishman uneasiness; some time the old man would fix his eyes on him, and, after having gazed on him, shed tears.

However, at the return of Spring, the savages took up arms again, and went forth to fight. The old man, was still strong enough to bear the fatigues of war, set out with them accompanied by his prisoner.

The Abenakis made a march of more than two hundred leagues through the forests; at last they arrived at a plain, where they discovered an English camp. The old man pointed it out to the young man, observing his countenance at the same time.

"There are your brethern," he said: there they are, waiting to fight with us. Listen; I have saved your life, I have taught you how to make a boat, a bow and arrows, to surprise the elk in the forest, to handle the tomahawk, and to scalp your enemy. Was it not so when I brought you to my cabin? Your hands were those of a child; they were of no use to get yourself food or to defend yourself; your soul was in darkness, you knew nothing; you owe me everything.—Would you be so ungrateful as to repay your brethern, and raise the battle-axe against us?"

The Englishman protested that he would rather die a thousand times than shed the blood of an Abenaki.

The savage bent his head, and covered his face with his hands, and, after having remained some time in this attitude, he looked at the young Englishman, and said in a tone of tenderness and grief:

"Have you a father?"

"He was living," said the young man, "when I left my native country."

"Oh how unhappy he is!" cried the savage; and after a few moment's silence, he added: "Do you know that I have been a father? I am no longer. I have seen my son fall in battle; he was at my side; I saw him die like a man; he was covered with wounds, my son when he fell. But I have avenged him! Yes, I have avenged him!"

He pronounced these words with energy. His whole body trembled. He was almost stifled by the groans that he would not allow to escape. His eyes were wild, his tears flowed not. He became gradually calm, and turning toward the east, where the sun was about to rise, he said to the young Englishman.

"Do you see that beautiful sky, brilliant with light? Do you like to look at it?"

"Yes," said the Englishman, "I do like to look at that beautiful sky."

"Ah, well! I care about it no longer," said the savage, shedding a torrent of tears.

The next minute he showed the youth a magnificent tree in blossom.

"Do you see that fine tree?" said he.—"Do you like to look at it?"

"Yes, I like to look at it."

"I do not any longer," replied the savage, hastily, and he added, immediately "Go to your country, that your father may not have pleasure in seeing the sun rise, and the flowers of Spring."

BE WISE.—That often a cold or slight cough is considered a very ordinary, trifling affair just as well left to go, as it came, and hence systematically neglected until a simple cure, this affection is converted into a serious pulmonary disease. The more prudent, aware that a cough or cold should never be trifled with, promptly use "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers," which have sustained their reputation for over 30 years, they are always efficacious, and effect a most beneficial influence on all the bronchial and pulmonary organs. Sold by all Druggists and country merchants. Price 25 cents per box.

At certain seasons of the year most persons are subject to diseases emanating from a low state of the blood. The cases are various; but it is only necessary in order for the prompt purification of that fluid, that the patient should use Fellow's Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites, with full assurance of obtaining the desired effect.—The Syrup will strengthen the organs of digestion, promote healthy assimilation, nourish the muscles, and renovate the nervous system.

WORTHY OF NOTE.—An exchange says there is scarcely a day passes over that we do not hear, either from persons coming into our office or in some other way, of the success of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment in the cure of coughs and colds, so prevalent about town just now.

Don't forget Gallstly's concert to-night.

The Port Hope and Lindsay papers are quite alive to the loss Peterboro is likely to sustain in the defeat of the Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Railroad, and are somewhat elated.

Lindsay is now considering railroad communication with the city of Toronto, and cares but little for the Grand Junction scheme. At a late meeting there, the speakers referred to the double dealing of the Belleville Gentlemen, in no flattering terms.

FIRE.—We regret to learn that on Saturday, 13th inst, a frame barn belonging to Mr. Alex. Graham, Otonabee, was totally destroyed by fire, containing upwards of 25 loads of wheat straw, 8 loads of unthreshed peas, a quantity of unthreshed oats, 150 bushels of peas in the granary—likewise a threshing mill and horse power. The cause of the fire unknown. There was about the breadth of one hundred acres between the dwelling house and barn. Insurance about two-thirds of the loss

ACCIDENT.—We regret to learn that on Friday last Mr. Joseph Bennet of N. Monaghan, had his leg broken a little above the knee. He was at a sawing "bee" at Mr. George Tully's on that day, and going from the place of sawing, was thrown off the sleigh against a stump, which caused the accident. We believe he is getting along favorably under the doctor's treatment.

The Independent Order of Good Templars in town held their 15th Anniversay on Tuesday evening. There was a nice meeting. After tea, the Rev. Mr. Kines, of Keene, Mr. Dixon, of the Peterboro Collegiate Institute, and Mr. Stratton, gave short addresses on the subject of Temperance. There were songs by Miss Kennedy, Miss Johnston, Miss Manorgan and Mr. Quincey; and readings by Mr. Mason and Mr. Clegg.

THE MANUFACTURER AND BUILDER.—This excellent scientific monthly begins the new year with an unusually good number. As a presage of its future excellence, it appears in a new and a beautiful dress, which can not fail to be admired by every one. We are glad to notice the continued success of this valuable magazine, and recommend all of our readers interested in scientific or industrial matters to subscribe to it, as its pages always contain special information regarding the most useful discoveries and inventions in science and art. Among the articles in the present issue we notice those on "Ready Made Houses," "International Societies," "New Rotary Drilling-Machine," "The Selden Double Action Plunger Pump," "Floral Fountains," "Manufacture of Russia Iron," "New Sources of Supply for Paper," "Fallacious Theories of Boiler Explosions," besides many others, all admirably illustrated Published by the Engineers' and Manufacturers' Publishing Company, 37 Park Row, New York $2 a year.

SABBATH SCHOOL EXTENSION.—We are pleased to learn that the friends of the Wesleyan Sabbath School are about to enlarge their present School Room. It is already the largest and most Commodious building for this purpose in the town; but it appears that for some five or six years past they have felt the want of a separate apartment for the accomodation of a senior Bible Class. It is intended besides seating most comfortably, to furnish it with all the modern requisites—maps, Chart, Black Board, &c. which will contribute very much to make it a most attractive room in which the young men of the church can meet for the weekly study of the Scriptures. We think the enterprise and energy commendable, more especially as we are informed that the teachers and friends have resolved that no part of the burden shall fall upon the trustees of the church. They depend entirely upon the result of special effort to obtain the means. It is for this object that the Soiree to come off on Tuesday evening next is to be held. We hope that all who sympathize with this praiseworthy object, will show their appreciation by their attendance.

PETERBOROUGH GAOL.—The Gaol was inspected on two occasions during the year—3th March and 10th of October. When there were respectively 7 prisoners—6 men and one woman; and 8 prisoners—5 men and 3 women, in confinement. At my first, I found the woman referred to in my last report, who in passing through the Province on her way to the United States had become insane, and was committed to gaol. Her removal to the London Asylum was recommended. One of the men also sent to gaol as a lunatic, was also removed to the Toronto Asylum. At the second inspection, a female who was very noisy and violent, and has several times been sent to gaol for insanity, was recommended for removal to Rockwood Asylum. The gaol, on both occasions was thoroughly clean, neat and orderly, and the management of its affairs very satisfactory. The County Council at all times gave prompt attention to suggestions, with a view to keeping the building in a proper state of repairs. The practice that in some instances obtains here, of keeping vagrants in continuous confinement, by placing a new commitment in the hands of the Sheriff, before the expiration of the current sentence, is certainly not sanctioned by the provisions of the Vagrant Act, however humane the intentions of the Committing Magistrate may be. 100 prisoners passed through the gaol during the current year. The expenditure for gaol purposes amounted to $2,293,68, a considerable sum having been spent in repairs; and $1,020 of the amount was for Officials salaries, say Gaoler $800, Turnkey $306. Matron $100, and Gaol Surgeon $120 per annum. Prison Report of 1871.

From the above report it will be seen that the Peterboro Gaol is in a very satisfactory and efficient state, and that the present Gaoler, Mr. McWilliams, keeps it very orderly and clean, and that our County Councillors have done their duty in keeping it in proper repair.

John Walton, Esq., Warden.

The County Council met on Tuesday, and after some little delay elected John Walton, Esq., Reeve of Smith, Warden for the year. The back Reeves, and someone or two of the front ones joined together to elect Mr. Peck, Warden, but fortunately for the County did not succeed. Messrs Millar, Choate, Clegg and Coughlan were each spoken of, and each had his claims for the honor, but waved it in favour of Mr. Walton, he being an old and respected member of the County Council. They believed, no doubt, too, that the persecution of Mr. Walton, by the Review, was one of the strongest recommendations in his favour. He was elected by the casting vote of the Reeve of Otonabee.

Mr. Walton is an upright honest man, who will not lend himself to any trickery, and hence the reason of the opposition of the Review to him. He is also a safe man, being opposed to extravagance and needless outlay of any kind.

James Millar, Esq. had a very strong claim for the Wardenship, and might have been elected had he sought for it, but he generously lent his aid to elect Mr. Walton.

No fair argument can be adduced against electing a Warden from the back Townships, but our readers will not have forgotten the cost of the last Warden from the back country, and Reeves will be slow to elect one of similar disposition. The honor of having Mr. Peck Warden before cost the County directly $412.75 and indirectly few knew how much, as no full detailed report has ever been received.

PARLIAMENTARY.

The Legislature of Ontario met on the 13th, and as might be expected, the first days were spent in giving explanations.

Mr. Scott Commissioner of Crown Lands completely refuted the charges made against him by his former friends and allies, proving conclusively that they were false, and silencing his accusers.

M. C. Cameron, who is now Leader of the Opposition, pretended that there was something kept back, and refused to accept Mr. Scott's declarations and letters from the lumbermen of Ontario. Does not this show strange inconsistency? Mr. Scott was all right while a supporter of John Sandfield, now however, things are changed, and Mr. Scott has become vile in a day.

The Blake Government, however, is very strong. The House is disposed to give it a fair trial. M. C. Cameron is about as factious as is possible. Mr. Blake has brought forward his motion on the Scott Murder case, and carried it by a vote of 62 to 1. Mr. Cameron being alone in his glory. This is the way the House meets Mr. Blake, satisfied that justice in the case of Scott means nothing more less than justice in the case of any other murder.—If a man is murdered, the matter of justice should not depend upon his religion, color or country, but on the fact that he was a fellow being. Such a complete victory for the Reform Party we trust will be used with discretion. Already numerous Bills have been introduced to give effect to the views of the party while in opposition, and thus by carrying out their pledges they are proving that they were sincere in bringing certain measures forward.

Politico—Agricultural.

The annual meeting of the West Riding Agricultural Society was held on Saturday last, in the Council Chamber, and was managed on the strongest Conservative political principles.

The meeting was packed with men from the Town who scarcely ever before attended one, and who that very day must have been hunted up at considerable cost and trouble. The Secretary informing all present at an early stage of the business, that things would go to a poll. More than a dozen others had been begged and prayed to attend the meeting, but with good sense remarked that it was a farmers' club, and should be left in their management. The Secretary-Treasurer's report being read, he asked if only members who had paid their subscription should vote, or would all be allowed to vote who might, during the poll, come in and pay it. It was urged by Mr. Sanderson that none but those who had paid should be allowed to vote, and this was eventually agreed to. They then proceeded to elect officers. Mr. I. Garbutt was re-elected President, by acclamation. Mr. Joseph Walton, Senr., 1st Vice president in the same way.

Mr. Henry Collins was nominated 2nd Vice-president, and Mr. Dumble nominated Mr. M. Sanderson, also. He remarked in proposing Mr. Sanderson that the street talk of the past year was that the society was a political clique directed by one or two individuals, and that his nomination was to destroy this idea, which if permitted to go on must eventually destroy public confidence in the society, which should be guarded against. Mr. Sanderson refused to be a candidate. Mr. W. Rutherford, of South Monaghan, was also mentioned, but he had neglected to subscribe in time and could not be elected. Mr. Collins was then elected.

Messrs. James Edwards and Wm. Goulter were named Auditors. Mr. Carnegie was nominated for Secretary-Treasurer, and in amendment it was moved that John B. McWilliams be Secretary Treasurer. The original motion was carried by a small majority. After some discussion the old Directors were elected except that, Mr. John Riddell, of South Monaghan, was substituted for Mr. W. Rutherford, the latter, as has been remarked, not having become a member in time.

The strongest feeling were manifested all through the election, and they seemed to be managed on purely political principles.

The Secretary then explained that a member to represent the district in the Council of Agriculture would have to be elected, and read a letter from Mr. Choate asking for reelection. Mr. John Walton was also proposed. He remarked that the necessity for the election of a representative had not been known by him till within a few days, as the law had been changed and in doing so, the new act was not well understood except by its framers.

The Secretary said that he had known it since 1st of December. Mr. Walton replied, then "you did not let others know"; to which he replied, "that was my business." Here the meeting became some what noisy, some arguing for Mr. Choate, as he had been in but one year; others that Mr. Walton had as many votes as Mr. Choate last year, and that Mr. Carling gave Mr. Choate a casting vote. The Secretary stated that three years ago Mr. Carling had done the same thing for Mr. Walton against Mr. Z. Burnham. Mr. Walton replied that he had no knowledge of that, and that he could not, without better authority, take his word, as it could not always be relied on. After considerable cross-firing a poll was opened and resulted in a majority of 13, we believe, for Mr. Choate—the Secretary writing down men's names who were not in the room, but whom he knew would vote against Mr. Walton, some of whom had to be hunted up outside somewhere—he having to call for them several times

The political aspect of the whole meeting was very evident, which certainly is to be regretted, as sooner or later it must result in the ruin of the society. But politics have attained to such a pitch in Peterboro, that they are in every thing.

The vote stood, first ballot:

Walton, 9; Peck, 8; Millar, 1; Clegg, 1; Choate, 1.

Second ballot:—Walton, 10; Peck, 10.

Mr. Millar, as the Reeve of the Municipality having the largest number of ratepayers on the Roll, had a casting vote, and gave it for Mr. Walton, thus electing him for the year.

The Warden elect then made the necessary declaration of office, and was conducted to the chair by Mr. Millar and Mr. Choate.

Mr. Walton thanked the Council for the honor conferred on him. He remarked that he would do his utmost to discharge the duties devolving upon him fairly. The Report of the Special Committee on Standing Committees was read and adopted.

The Warden reported that the Special Committee appointed to wait on Mr Rogers had done so, and that Mr. Rogers had declined to act on the Bridge Committee, but would give any information or aid required.

Mr. Coughlan moved, seconded by Mr. Brown,—That the Warden, John Walton, Esq., be a member of the Bridge Committee, in the place of Mr. Rogers.—Carried.

Dr. Clegg thought that five members should be on the Bridge Committee.

On motion of Mr. S. S. Peck, several papers were referred to the committee to which each belonged.

Moved by Mr. Choate, seconded by Mr. J. P. Brown,—That whereas, by the 7th Clause of Section No. 341, Municipal Act, ample provisions are made for the keeping in repair of boundary line roads between Townships, therefore,

Resolved, that in future this Council make no appropriation for repairs of Roads and Bridges, except the Bridge over the Otonabee River, the Burleigh Bridge, Buckhorn Bridge, Mud Lake and Pigeon Creek Bridges.

In amendment it was moved by Mr. Collins, seconded by Mr. Clegg, That the appropriations be made this year as heretofore, as this Council cannot see any better way of keeping the County roads and bridges in repair, at present.

The yeas and nays being a tie, the Warden gave his vote with the amendment, as he thought the Council would be compelled to keep up the roads and bridges it had spent money on from time to time.

A. S. MAGUIRE,
T. C. D.

We recommend a perusal of this sensible article from the Brantford Courier, a conservative of the conservatives. It manifests a little honesty, which is somewhat cheering at the present time, when almost the whole of the opposition papers appear anxious to raise any cry that may blacken the new ministry, and their followers:—

"With all deference to the metropolitan papers, we must be permitted to state that we believe that this 'Grit Republican' howl which the Leader and other journals is raising against our Ministerial fellow-subjects is unwise, unjust uncalled for. No one can accuse the Brantford Conservatives of Grit tendencies, for its course of thirty years steady adherence to the conservative cause ought, with reasonable people, to place it, at least while it remains under the same management and person who just stated it, above such suspicion. No moderate Conservative paper in Canada has more steadily and sometimes perhaps fiercely, pitched into the Globe and the Hon. George Brown as an ultra Radical organ, and an ultra Grit politician; and yet we should be very sorry there editors who would make the impression that the Blakes, Browns, McKellars, and McKenzies are traitors to our beloved Sovereign or to the constitution of this Dominion. Very far from this we most sincerely believe that loyalty, true British principles and interest, and love of the Throne and Empire, belong equally to them as with ourselves. A very sad thought indeed would it be for us really to believe that that very large portion of our fellow Canadians who style themselves Reformers, or Liberals, were Yankees and Republicans at heart. Our prospects as a Dominion and nation would be gloomy indeed if this were true, for annexation that would be a mere matter of time, and the Union Jack would not float over our heads for many years. What have we seen in our past history to show that Reformers are not equally loyal with Conservatives, excepting only the silly escapade of Wm. Lyon McKenzie in 1837? And even that mad procedure was the result, to a great extent, of bad management—like the Boston tea affair—at Downing street. Ever since we have had responsible Government, and it has been seen that England's management of us is paternal and just, ever since Canadians have read for themselves, and compare the principles and results Monarchism and Republicanism, the Democracy of the United States has lost its charms on this side of the forty-ninth line of latitude, and the desire for annexation has become defunct. Irrespective of politics, religion or race, Canadians are truly loyal to the Crown and to the Dominion. It is just as vile to call Mr. Blake or Mr. McKenzie a rebel or a traitor, as it would be to call John S. Macdonald or Mr. Carling such. Have the Liberals ever refused to do militia or volunteer duty? Were there none but Conservatives to turn out against the Fenians? Were they backward in aiding in our demonstrations to do honor to the sons of Her Majesty when they visited us? By no means! We rejoice and honestly, that our people as a whole are loyal and enthusiastic Monarchists and devoted subjects of our Realm and Dominion. Do we not injure our country in making this 'Republican' cry for mere political purposes. What can Englishman think of us; would any foreigners who may have intended to settle or invest their capital amongst us, who read in our leading Conservative journals that the leading statesmen of the "Liberal" school are all Republicans, think of us? Will they let, taking such statements as the truth like bringing their families or placing their capital to a country which must be on the verge of revolution? What can the Yankees think of us if they believe these statements, but that we are surely opening very fast for annexation, and must shortly fall into their hands? will the Republic entertain any respect for us as a nation when they find that loyalty is declared by ourselves to be looked up with a certain class of our people? Will they be disposed to enter into any arrangements with us that would be calculated to benefit us as a Dominion? Will they not rather do all they can to render these declared "Republicans" amongst us more and more dissatisfied with our Government? This political "Yankee" cry is almost injudicious, nationely and suicidal.

We have no confidence in the Grits as statesmen, but we respect them as fellow loyalists. Let us watch them closely in their Ministerial career, but let us give them a fair trial. Let us not, after all our abhorrence of faction, turn factionists ourselves, but show that consistency which our respectability demands.

ANAHEIM, LOS ANGELOS, CALIFORNIA.

To the East and North of us stand out in bold relief a series of low rolling hills, apparently farmed on a large scale. The farm houses are situated along the side of the hills, and from a distance display the appearance of some romantic glen in the heath clad hills of my native land. However much I admire the scene, I cannot dwell on it as we soon fly past and very soon pass Council Bluffs, a low lying town on the banks of the Missouri River, where the river edge brings us to a stop, and have to place ourselves in readiness for the word "march to the steamboat" now lying ready to ferry us across the muddy river to the station of the Union Pacific R. R., which we reach in a few minutes sail and are landed at Omaha in 46 hours from Toronto, on Sunday morning the 29th. At the station our tickets are exchanged and there discrimination begins with emigrant's tickets. We are told when we arrive at 9:30 a. m. that our train will not start until 4 p. m. First class men are waiting to start and our baggage has to be checked, so away we go to the baggage master's apartments, and there amidst all of a wooden house we are privileged to see our boxes handled in a very unceremonial manner, and you will often have strange language hurled at the devoted heads of the ring. Our baggage is weighed and we are presented with a card stating that we have 170 lbs. extra baggage and for which we have to pay $17. I have no greenbacks consequently have to enquire for some one who could supply me. I was directed to one of the privileged few, who shark-like follows the sinking ship. He was the chosen one to mend the broken trunks, and for driving a few nails and tying a cord round a box I saw him paid $1.50. But with that I had nothing to do. He said he could accomodate me in the mean time, and took $40 Bank of B. N. N. Bills and gave me $45 currency, a good share, but I cannot now help it and so need not grumble.

After all is arranged I went up town and found the town situated high up from the river. It being Sunday, I am glad to say I found all the most respectable shops shut, yet a great many were open as is usual. In some portions of the town they appeared to have had side-walks once, now times seemed to be changing and only the ribs remain as the last vestage of dignity. They are building here across the river a magnificent iron bridge with piers of solid masonary, I am told sunk very deep in the sand to obtain a firm foundation, some 60 feet or more. They work all days of the week, and night too, on the the bridge. I forgot to tell you that we crossed the the mighty Missippi in the night, over what appeared to be a splendid bridge.

We entered the cars in the afternoon, but from some unexplained cause we were switched on a siding and lay till after dark. We have good comfortable cars, and not crowded, the only nuisance here appears to be the coal which we have to burn, and which smells bad. After a good deal of shoving and pulling, the train is made up of Freight cars, excepting the ones we occupy. After about five miles we have to stop, as the road is blocked up by some cars getting off the track; but we are soon under way I cannot get around it, being night. Leaving a station and fixing myself for a nap. I am disturbed by a strange voice in the cars, and get up on my pins. I find he is anxious to secure a ride, under the seats he proposes, but after carefully scanning his countenance I come to the conclusion that he cannot, his face appears vicious, I tell him he cannot be here on any account and so off he slides; to prey on some more gullable or tender hearted passengers. Daylight is again upon us and the company evidently have certain stations where refreshments are sold. 75 cts. for a meal is not deemed exorbitant. We however have plenty of provisions of our own, and need not buy yet, as before starting from Toronto I obtained a supply of biscuits for 7 cts. per lb., and when bread cannot be bought reasonable, we intend to fall back on this. We are now going through the state of Nebraska, the country looks well but very dry, looking from the cars when daylight comes upon us. After the sun rises we came in sight of the Platte River, and following many miles on its valley we see a black looking country with no timber and few houses. A little timber is seen here and there on the banks of small streams, and much of the country has been burned by fire. Crossed the Nort Plate River on a trussle bridge of great length, the weather is now colder in the morning. We find the country looking yet more barren with no settlement, save at the Companys stations. The rule of the Coy. seems to be that each divisional driver and conductor and other hands runs to a certain station, about 10 hours run, then another engine driver and set of men take charge at there station. The Coy. have conspicuous buildings and fine workshops. The high bluffs on each side of the road look majestic in the distance. This is on Tuesday.

For the Examiner.

I had long supposed that the object of publishing a newspaper was the dissemination of useful information among the people, and, generally speaking, this is the case. But every rule has its exception, and among newspapers, the Peterboro Review is the exception. When Dr. Poole had the charge of that paper he conducted it with all the fairness and decency that he was permitted to do, and during his time it had some claim to respectability, but in the hands of John Carnegie, this paper has become the vehicle of all that is low and slanderous, and from week to week it is filled with the foulest abuse of all those who stand in his way or who oppose him and his employer, Robert Romaine, in their schemes for their personal advancement. Mr. Romaine, I presume, expects to remain in Peterboro, and I probably he intends to continue the publication of the Review. If this be so, I would suggest to him the advisability of a change in its management and character, so as to make it more respectable and useful, and more in accordance with his duty as its Proprietor. The publication of the paper might be so conducted as to effect some good among its readers instead of being an example of mob-law and violence, and Mr. Romaine may depend upon it that the day will surely come when he will be made to feel the truth of what I now say. Public opinion is slow to manifest itself, but it will vindicate its authority when other means fail.

In my limited experience I have always found that abuse is no argument, and that the surest way to obtain public confidence is to deserve it. That the surest way to obtain approbation is to address the reason and understanding of those whose judgment I wish to influence and whose approval I desire to possess. I am aware that people's minds are liable to be prejudiced and misled by m to say will help it on. A short time ago the Peterboro & Haliburton Railway was the especial favourite of John Carnegie and Robert Romaine, the Review newspaper and Mr. Blandell, but the work had its charms when they lost its management, and whilst in their hands it was everything that was good, in the hands of Mr. Fowler it is over-doing that is bad. Formerly with these men a railroad to the North was incompatible to the prosperity and advancement of Peterboro, now, with these same persons it is the reverse of this, and for reasons best known to themselves a road from Belleville through Peterboro to Lindsay, with a branch to Bobcaygeon, West of Pigeon Creek, is worth Peterboro giving $50,000 to obtain it. Verily these men's cupidity and selfishness have made them mad. The world has furnished many instances of men whose love of money has led them astray. Judas Iscariot sold his Lord for thirty pieces of silver, and English history furnishes an example of men who betrayed their King and for a bribe delivered him into the hands of his executioners.

Mr. John Carnegie appears to imagine that he has obtained a little notoriety by his opposition to the road in question, but it is a notoriety which no one but himself, except perhaps Mr. Robert Romaine would be proud of, and it is obtained by the sacrifice of his patriotism and the prostitution of opportunities which should have been employed to a better purpose. It is a notoriety which may be likened to that which history has assigned to the name of the traitor, Benedict Arnold. Ill it becomes a man like John Carnegie to lecture and abuse some of our oldest and best citizens who have spent long lives in helping to make Peterboro what it is to-day! If Mr. Carnegie had the same interest to serve that they have, he would follow their example, and Mr. Romaine would do the same, and instead of plotting schemes for Gas and Water Works they would join with their fellow townsmen in their efforts to accomplish a work which will be an advantage to all.

If John Carnegie and Robert Romaine take any credit to themselves for the defeat of the Railway By-law, they will no doubt claim their reward. What that may be is best known to themselves and those in whose interest they are acting. They need not imagine that their attempts to sacrifice the Town, will pass unnoticed and unquestioned. It does not always require an admission of the motives which guide their conduct to convince people, for whatever the actions of a man plainly rest in trickery and wrong the exercise of a very little common sense will easily point public sentiment in the right direction. Peterboro to-day occupies an unenviable position. With the admitted necessity of a Railway to the North, and with the certainty of its ready accomplishment, it has, in all probability, forever lost it. And this is not the worst part of our position; because, should Mr. Fowler transfer his stock in the Peterboro & Haliburton Railway Co. to the Midland Railway Co., as he has a perfect right to do—and this will be virtually disposing of the Charter—the Midland Railway Co. may extend their road from Lakefield to Mud Lake and then come down and compel us to hand over to them the $40,000 already given for that purpose. And then, when this is accomplished the Town of Peterboro will have to be content with a road to the Lake by way of Lakefield, in the hands and under the control of a Railway Co. who will take care to send the lumber and other products of the Back Country, as they do at present, by way of Lindsay, and over a longer and dearer road. And whatever sum they may pay Mr. Fowler to get the control of the Haliburton Charter they will make good to themselves out of the people of Peterboro by means of an increased tariff, as they did before. Then, when it is too late, some of the lumbermen and other business men here will find out to their sorrow that in opposing the late By-law they have been working against themselves, and they will have the satisfaction of knowing that they alone are to blame for it. It is a pity however that the innocent should suffer with the guilty, but I suppose this can't be helped. By and bye these very men will be willing to give twice Eighty Thousand Dollars to get rid of the incubus upon their trade which they alone have brought upon it. Peterboro at one time could have had the main line of the Midland Railway direct from Port Hope, instead of Lindsay, for $60,000. The same opposition to that offer existed then that exists to-day—foremost among which was the Peterborough Review, and it was refused. What was the result? After we had raised up a rival by thus driving that road to Lindsay, and after we had lost all the advantages which the building of that road to Peterboro instead of Lindsay would have conferred upon us, we were at length forced to give $120,000, with some $30,000 more along with it for discount and other losses, to get a branch to Millbrook in order to get an outlet to the front by means of that very road which we had previously prevented coming here. At that time we had Cobourg influence working against our interests. To-day we have Lindsay, Port Hope and the Midland Railway Co. all doing the same, and as we know that it would pay either of those parties to expend thousands of dollars to defeat our undertaking, we may readily guess the motives which influence some men among us to work for their advantage.

Mr. Editor, I have already made my communication longer than I intended, and I will close, although there is a great deal more that I would like to say upon the subject.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the glow and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys is derived from its cures of the many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed actually saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections, such ulcers, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination, may be easily healed when this has been thoroughly expelled from the blood. Hence, wherever this prevails, whether it be manifested in the form of pimples, blotches, boils, or internal ulcerations, Sarsaparilla is the remedy demanded. Many who have been painfully afflicted with these disorders have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely needs information of the virtues of this medicine.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of mankind. Often, this insidious taint lies concealed in the system, undetected by the most skilful physician, and invites the attack of some fatal disease, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Apparently sound and healthy throughout the body at one season, some favorable occasion, during spring or summer, rapidly develops it in one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or brain, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the necessity of using a bottle of this Sarsaparilla in time, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, in the end, a perfect cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Piles, Epilepsy, Neuralgia and the various Uterine affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required in subduing the obstinate maladies to which they give rise. Long continued use of this medicine will eradicate every taint of Mercury or Minerals. Tetter, Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Carbuncles, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matter in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Tic, Constipation, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising as they often do, from the gradual poisoning of the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Tormented and Tortured, Dyspeptic, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections or symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

Doubting.

BY ELLA WHEELER.

Sometimes we mortals, writhing in bitter anguish,
Crushed by great grief, that seem to hard too bear,
Are led to doubt God's goodness, and his wisdom,
And will not lift our burdened hearts in prayer.
I think these moments are the very darkest
The blackest, and the coldest, that we know
And I think God, and Christ, and all the angels,
Pity us most in that phase of our woe.

I had a little child I fondly cherished,
A winsome, playful, tender-hearted boy,
Strong-willed, yet gentle; gay yet, mild and loving;
He was our household idol and our joy.
We lavished on him stores of pure affection;
We gave him the best love our hearts possessed;
We dressed him in rich robes of finest texture,
And gazing on him, deemed this earth life blest.

We taught him all things good, true, and noble;
We told him of the dead Lord crucified;
We planned for him a bright and happy future,
We guarded him from danger—yet he died.
Not all the gold and riches we could lavish,
Not all our love could save him from the tomb;
He died; and when the sweet eyes closed for ever,
They shut the sunlight in, and left but gloom.

To-day I saw a drunkard's child, a vagrant,
Ill clad, ill fed, uncombed unwashed, and wild
His home, the street; his lessons, vice and sorrow;
His garments, rags; his youthful lips defiled
With rum, tobacco, falsehoods, and blaspheming.
What can he feture be, but one of crime?
And thinking of this, and of my boy who slumbered,
My heart felt hard, just for a little time.

It seemed so strange that he, a homeless vagrant,
Unloved unloving treading the path to sin,
That he was left, and mine, so fondly cherished,
Mine so beloved, whose life seemed so twined in
And round our heart strings, that when he was taken
It left them torn and bleeding. As should die.
Ah me! it seemed strange! and yet God's wisdom,
I cannot doubt, nor must I question "why"

God being All Wise. Father, King, Creator,
It would be strange if you or I should know
All that he knows or understand his wisdom,
All things he does, or why he does them so.
Were all this plain unto our mortal vision,
There would be nothing new to learn above,
So, though the cross be great, and the prize hidden,
I will not doubt His Wisdom, or his love.

MODERN MARRIAGES.

BY REV. H. M. GALLAGHER.

"The world does move!" muttered the much persecuted philosopher, while the obstructionists, who glared at him, were astounded at the insane obstinacy of the fellow.

If the old astronomer were to awake and revisit the glimpses of the moon, were he to become second Rip Van Winkle, he could not fail to perceive that his statement was a true one, and that the world has kept moving pretty fast since his day.

There are many things which one sees like. Nay, sometimes give their sincere thanks, only this and nothing more, as has happened, and more than once, to the writer of this article.

We were accustomed for some years to present to the bride, at each marriage, a neat copy of the Bible, embellished with our autograph, and a few lines of poetical but pleasing advice.

We found, however, that as the income tax demanded so much per cent of our fees, and as the Bibles called for ever so much more, we were, in short, not paid for marrying happy lovers, but were paying them for the honor of being permitted so to do. For some time past our brides are permitted to buy their own Bibles.
